REPLICA OF MOUNT VERNON, HOME OF WASHINGTON, TO FEATURE AMERICAN PORTION OF OVERSEAS EXPOSITION

The 199th anniversary of George Washington's birth on February 22 will witness completion of the full-size replica of Mount Vernon at Paris as the principal American exhibit for the international colonial and overseas exposition.

It will be furnished and decorated throughout just as it was when the Marquis de Lafayette visited our first president there in the stormy days of the revolution. The famous rug of Louis XVI, the bedroom occupied by Lafayette, the bedroom in which Washington died, and all the famous portraits and objects of art will be reproduced in Mount Vernon de Paris.

On next July 4th, climaxing American week at the exposition, famous French and American theatrical stars will enact the drama of Lafayette's first visit to Mount Vernon in the costume and manner of the 18th century.

Above is the first portrait ever made of George Washington, painted in 1776 by Charles Wilson Peale when Washington was 44 years old, and recently returned to the United States after 150 years in Europe. The portrait shows him standing at the Battle of Trenton, and gives a striking impression of his great stature, the first president having been nearly six feet four inches in height. It is considered a superior likeness to the Stuart portraits. The Peale portrait will hang in Mount Vernon de Paris at the international exposition.
