For twenty-five years we've traveled together,
Along the highway of married life;
Through shadows and sunshine all kinds of weather,
With joy and with sorrow, but never with strife.

The dreams of our youth, not always have blessed us,
The hopes that we cherished—sometimes passed us by;
But few were the things that really distressed us
And many rich blessings made brilliant our sky.

Full many the cares that our children have brought us,
Full many the vigils with slumber forgot;
Yet ne'er have we felt that with trouble they fought us
And life lived without them! Thank God—not our lot.

And though we may think of the errors behind us,
And of wolves that confronted our door;
The thoughts of those years, still oft will remind us
To wish we might live them all over once more.
