How Incomes Are Spent, Object of Survey Launched in Nation by Federal Bureaus

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—(AP)—The government set out today to find out what people do with money.

It hopes to accomplish this by the end of the fiscal year, June 30, through a coordinated survey by the bureau of labor statistics and the bureau of home economics.

Authorized as a PWA "white collar" project, the survey will be carried out with a peak enrollment of 4,000 persons from the relief rolls. They will draw an average annual salary of $1,000.

Officials said the last of regional offices scheduled for Providence, R. I., Columbus, O., Atlanta, Ga., Denver, Colo., and Portland, Ore., have been opened and that sectional work has started in New York and Chicago.

The information said it would be valuable to advertisers in that it will show what percentages of the average income goes for foods, housing, wearing apparel, transportation, personal spending, recreation, savings, health, education, social activities, civil activities and taxes.

Previous information either was inadequate or outdated, it was said.

This survey, officials said, will cover the full income range from the most meager wages to incomes from $7,500 to 10,000. Above that up to incomes of $20,000 or more, investigations will be made by salaried government experts.

The bureau of labor statistics will direct the survey in 45 centers, each of which will include one large city of several hundred thousand population, two cities averaging between 40,000 and 75,000 and several cities of from 8,000 to 18,000 population.

Rural surveys will be made by the bureau of home economics, department of agriculture.

Some 1919-1930 figures showed that for the period and region studied 25.7 per cent of the family income was spent for food, 18.1 for housing, 11.0 for wearing apparel, 12.1 for transportation, 9.6 for recreation, 9.2 for savings, 3.2 for health, 2.7 direct taxes, 2.0 education, 1.8 social activities, 1.0 civil activities and taxes.
