SEA-LION COW IS TAKEN BACK TO SEA

NELESCOTT, Ore., Feb. 26.—(AP)—The charming Pacific hild Oregon's land-going sea-lion today but state troopers who released the mammal here have their belligerent ward fresh in memory.

The troopers dumped the animal, commonly known as "Mrs. Finnegan," on the beach here late yesterday after a trying trip from Canby 130 miles inland, and "Mrs. Finnegan" made haste to give herself again to the sea. Troopers said she "should be belted out by this time."

The sea-lion was captured in a grain field near Canby, a mile from the nearest water. It appeared in the Willamette river at Portland last week, boosted itself over the falls at Oregon City and disappeared—until yesterday when startled farmers heard its bellowing in the field.

Stout ropes and patience, aided by a block and tackle, finally led to its safe deposit in the truck. "Mrs. Finnegan" suffered the indignity of a shot-gun charge early in her visit in the Oregon City area. She lost an eye and her hide was bullet-riddled. But her defiance remained undimmed.

The 9-foot animal, estimated to weigh 1,200 pounds, traveled further in Oregon's interior than any other normally sea-going beast on record.

Mr. Smith's talk was on World Peace and was inspirational in his reference to women's part which will be a necessary factor in bringing about an attitude conducive to world peace. Since economic and expansion problems are important factors in the cause of war, each country must sacrifice to suppressed nations, the speaker declared, citing the statement of Lloyd George in parliament recently which caused a furor when he said England should give some of her colonies to a European country. A fundamental conception of the value of human life must be made realistic to the people of the world before world peace has a foundation on which to build, Mr. Smith brought out.
