SCANTY LIST EYED
FOR "BEST" BOOK

By WILLARD KEEFE

NEW YORK, March 27.—(AP)—The committee which will eventually choose the Pulitzer prize play for 1935-36 had reason today to be grateful to the critics' circle for selecting "Winter" as the season's most meritorious.

It means there will be no common choice, with possible chance of the Pulitzer board being "led" by critics' opinion. Maxwell Anderson, author of "Winter," won a Pulitzer prize with "Both Your Houses," and no dramatist can be twice honored.

It is a remarkably scanty list the Pulitzer judges have to pick from this year. Showmen see only four possible candidates for the invariably disputed benison—"Boy Meets Girl," "Paradise Lost," "Russet Mantle" and "End of Summer."

Robert E. Sherwood's "Idiot's Delight," acclaimed by two critics as the season's finest play, is believed to be beyond consideration of the Pulitzer gentlemen because of its late opening—last Wednesday night.

The skippy group of leaders is due to the preponderance of foreign hits. The greatest of successes are Shaw's "St. Joan," revived by Katharine Cornell, and Helen Hayes' "Victoria Regina," by the British Laurence Houseman.

The German-born carpenter came through the nightmare of trial at Flintington looking in better health than did many of those—counsel, prosecutors, court attendants—who had no personal concern in the case. He has actually thrived during the trigger tension that has marked his months of incarceration.

What volcano of emotion may be stirring within him, only Bruno Richard Hauptmann knows; but today, with the day of doom creeping toward him like an unstoppable tide, he appears primed for life.

TRENTON, N. J., March 28.—(AP)—Eight o'clock next Tuesday night probably will find Bruno Hauptmann—"public enemy No. 1 of the world"—they called him—enjoying the best health he ever has known yet eight o'clock Tuesday night is the time fixed for his death.

Thirteen months in the death house under almost constant sentence of death have failed to shake him either in body or mind.

"I shall build myself strong in health," he was quoted as saying shortly after he entered the prison, following his conviction for the Lindbergh baby murder, "because I want to be in perfect physical trim when they find out they have made a mistake, and set me free."

He is lean and strong, well muscled. His eyes are clear. The only thing to mark him is the inevitable prison pallor.

Of all those involved in the famous murder case either directly or indirectly, Hauptmann seems actually to have thrived physically; Hauptmann and his baby son.

Among the others: Mrs. Anna Hauptmann, the wife who Tuesday night may become a widow, has been ill; Dr. John F. Condon (Jaffis) has only recently returned from a southern cruise undertaken in part because of the ill health of his daughter; Justice Trenchard, who sentenced Hauptmann to die, has not been as vigorous as his usual wont; and one of the jurors who returned the verdict of guilty is dead.
