

ROTATION IN GAME BOARD ADVOCATED

Proposition May Be Placed Before Oregon Voters Via Initiative.

PORTLAND, Ore., April 8.—(AP)—A movement to put before the voters through an initiative petition a proposal to stagger the terms of state game commissioners with the argument that it will eliminate political juggling will be started soon.

Application for a ballot title will be filed with the secretary of state in a few days, Ed Averill, chairman of the Oregon state conservation council, said.

The measure provides five-year rotating terms for the five commissioners, with the term of one to expire each year.

They would be appointed by the governor upon recommendation of various sportsmen, wild life groups and others designated by the legislature. Once appointed, they could be removed only by recall or for conviction of malfeasance.

"This is not an attack on the present commission," emphasized Averill, a former state game warden. "Passage would not necessarily mean all members would be replaced."

It is probable some would be reappointed under the new setup.

As soon as the attorney general approves a ballot title, the campaign to secure 12,000 petition signatures will start.

"The proposal is the result of 10 years of work on the part of sportsmen and conservationists throughout the state," Averill continued.

"We have promises of wide support from the Izaak Walton league, the Oregon Wild Life council and numerous other groups."

Several weeks ago directors of the state conservation council, which is composed of representatives of sportsmen, governmental groups, chambers of commerce and conservationists, voted unanimously to seek the constitutional amendment.
