PLEA FOR BIRDS IN HAY TIME MADE

"As haying time approaches, consider the wild life, and it will eventually more than repay those who take the extra care," urges Arthur S. Einarson, federal research man in this field located at Oregon State college.

In the back swathe around the fence rows will be found the majority of quail nests, in many localities, Einarson points out. If the crop is particularly valuable, of course no one would expect a farmer to leave it for the wild birds, but if it has been already tramped so that but little could be recovered, leaving it would provide an excellent winter food supply for game birds, he says. If it is going to be cut, leaving it until the last will give the birds a chance to move to a safer haven.

"The farmer who has a lot of quail on his property will need to worry less about thistles," says Einarson. "All species of quail relish thistle seeds very much and eat enough to repay the farmer for his kindly interest in their welfare."

Most of the plans for direct compensation to farmers for hunting privileges are in the formative stage, but the man who cooperates in increasing the wild life on his farm may confidently expect in the future to receive at least a portion of his tax money from this source, without needing to change basic farming practices, Einarson believes.

SHEEP SHIPMENTS SHOW HUGE GAIN

PORTLAND, April 26.—(AP)—Deliveries of Oregon livestock to northwest markets in 1935 exceeded receipts in all classes for 1934 with the most impressive increase being made in shipments of sheep, the United States department of agriculture said. A decided trend of shipments to Oregon markets appeared.

Oregon's deliveries of sheep to Portland markets totalled 156,378 head, an increase of nearly 16,000; calves were up 55 head to 10,853 and cattle increased 19,000 head to 83,668. Swine fell off 3,600 head to 91,554.

Deliveries of Oregon sheep to Washington stockyards declined 2,300 head to 25,681, while swine showed a tremendous increase of 14,200 head to 15,187. Shipments of calves were off 10 head to 422 and cattle declined nearly 3,000 head to 2,983.
