POET'S CORNER

THE CIRCUS

By E. F. W. Crowding around the big top The folk all wait to see The grand and glorious wonders From lands far over the sea.

Tigers, lions and zebras, Monkeys and elephants, too, Brilliant hued birds from the Sunny south and the funny kangaroo.

See the stately giraffe With his head held up so high, The dainty, prancing horses And the tumbling clowns go by.

The beautiful, daring ladies Conquering wild animals with ease, But the best of all (I hope he doesn't fall) Is the man on the flying trapeze.

COUNT THE COST

Oh, yes, it was A rotten scheme That brought liquor back And I could scream.

Whenever I think Of the little boy Who in youth Was such a joy.

And I see him now When he is a man— Count wasted talents If you can!

And when I heard An officer say, "He'll be no trouble For many a day"

I began to wonder "What's this all about?" 'Twas crooked driving As I soon found out.

The officer was right— When he threw the man in, And maybe saved him From a greater sin.

For no life is safe With a driver like him— No, it was not just An officer's whim.

If we are looking For the real source Of all this trouble 'Twas liquor, of course.

And if I had my way About the stuff I'd throw the whole business Over the bluff.

The sale of liquor— Helps pay for RELIEF? But who can count The cost of grief?

O, ye wise-heads, Away with your scheme That makes my friend A drunken fiend! —By Lulu B. Rose.

Dr. Foster Wood, secretary of the committee on marriage and the family, disputed the assertion.
