THE nominee at Cleveland, you may take it for granted, will be the man regarded as having the best chance to beat Roosevelt. If Landon, in the opinion of the delegates, is that man, Landon will be nominated. Otherwise not.

HERE is an interesting tale from Mexico City: Bandits raided a Mexican town and burned the school house. The teacher, SENORITA (Senorita is Spanish for Miss) Maria Hernandez climbed to the roof of her home with a rifle, cut loose at the raiders and in the course of a half hour battle killed two of them and wounded four. The rest took to the brush.

A country that produces school teachers like that must have a future. So don't give up hope for Mexico.

THE losses are in the southeast, and in Charlotte, North Carolina, officials urge residents to pray for the end of the drouth which has caused loss so far in excess of 150 million dollars (estimates, not statistics).

Gov. Walter Welford had set aside Sunday as a day of special prayer.

Excitedly he began digging around for more, and there they were by the dozens.

His fond hopes of retiring, however, were short-lived. Taking his fortune to Asheville, he learned the coins were counterfeit, probably buried by a counterfeit ring broken up in this section 30 years ago.

"We'll turn it inside out," said David, starting for the door.

"Wait," said Gordon. He bent over Helene, placed his hand under her chin, gently. She had ceased to sob, but her whole body still trembled and her face was void of expression.

"Darling," Gordon said, "did you turn off your alarm?"

"The girl stared at him dully. 'I don't know anything about it,' Doris said.

Gordon straightened up, faced Nelson.

"All right," he said. "Search the house."

When Dr. Grace arrived, he nodded approvingly at Johnson, after a brief examination of Nat.

"You did the right thing, Johnson," he said. "It's not a bad wound at all. The only danger was in loss of blood.

Johnson nodded.

"I'll have a look at Helene before I fix you up, young man," said Dr. Grace.

"Go right ahead, doctor," said Nat. "I'm all right."

Dr. Grace went into the other room. He motioned everyone back out of his way and bent over Helene. She was still white and her breath was coming in jerky gasps.

He shook his head gravely at the expression on her face. His spoke to her but she did not answer.

"I'll give her something to put her to sleep," he said, turning to Gordon. "If she can just relax, she may be all right. Meanwhile, I suggest that you all leave me with my two patients."

"Isn't there anything I can do?" asked Carlotta.

He shook his head, then turned to Johnson.

"THERE'S MURDER IN THE AIR" By ROY CHANSLOR

CHAPTER XIX
Doris seemed to be paying no attention to the talk about her. She was holding Helene close, murmuring to her, and the girl was gradually calming down.

Gordon was ushering the others out of the room. Tyler went to the door of Doris' room and looked in. Ruth had not moved from her position a few feet from Nat. She was standing there very quietly, so quietly that he apparently did not realize her presence.

Tyler put his arm about her shoulders. She turned quickly. Nat opened his eyes and smiled at Tyler.

"He'll be all right, dear," said Tyler. "Won't you, son?"

"Certainly will," said Nat. Ruth smiled then and accompanied her father out of the room.

Dr. Grace gave Helene an opiate and sat beside her until she had begun to breathe deeply and naturally. Johnson returned with the maid and then went on up to Gordon's apartment. Dr. Grace instructed the maid to sit by Helene quietly and to notify him if she woke. Then he went back to Nat.

Upstairs Gordon was pacing up and down the floor. Tyler had seated the others in a semicircle, with Ruth at one end. The blind girl sat quietly, her face calm and serene. The others all kept their eyes on Tyler, waiting for him. As soon as Johnson appeared, Tyler waved him to the empty seat at the other end of the semicircle.

"Now then," he said, "we've got to have a complete picture of this thing as far as you people can piece it together. We're sure of two things: The alarm was cut off in both Doris' and Helene's rooms, and this would be the killer fired the shot from inside the house. To be exact, from the curtains which cover the door between the bedrooms occupied by Doris and Helene. I saw that much myself."

He looked slowly from one to the other. All were leaning forward, apparently absorbed. Doris was deathly pale. The others exhibited varying degrees of excitement.

"This thing was carefully planned," Tyler went on. "And by some one familiar with the work of the alarm system! The intention was either to make a getaway through the French windows or to make it appear that he had escaped that way."

He turned his glance toward Gordon.

"But you say the balcony was clearly visible in the moonlight, and that you saw no one," he said significantly.

"That's right," said Gordon. He paused, then added, "But of course I was terribly excited, and some one might have slipped out of Doris' window without my seeing him. I—I was looking especially at Helene's window. But if the fellow didn't escape by the balcony, we'll soon know. I'm having the house ransacked. We'll turn him up if he's still inside."

Tyler turned to Johnson.

"We'll try to find out who we all know about it," he said. "Where were you, Johnson?"

"In my room," said Johnson promptly. "I heard the shot and ran to Mr. Gordon's room. His door was unlocked. When I saw he wasn't there, I got downstairs as fast as I could. Miss Doris' door was open. I saw her inside, with Mrs. Gordon, Mr. David and Mr. Tyler, who was bending over her. The bell began to ring at the front door then, and Mr. Tyler told me to let Mr. Gordon in. I found him with Miss Tyler on the front porch."

Tyler nodded, and turned to David.

"I was asleep," said David. "I sprang up at the shot, grabbed my dressing-gown and ran into the hallway. Carlotta was coming out of her room. We ran to Doris' room, where we saw Doris and Mr. Tyler and Benson lying on the floor."

STEINER LOOMS AS "OUTSIDE CHOICE"

Oregon Senator Looked on as Compromise Aspirant for White House.

By MAURICE MERRYFIELD International Illustrated News Writer.

CLEVELAND—One of the interesting angles to the republican convention of 1936 is the possibility, admittedly slim, that Senator Frederick Steiwer of Oregon, convention keynoter, might be the "compromise candidate" if the Landon boom is stopped, an eventuality which now appears improbable.

At any rate, Steiwer looms as one of the most powerful "dark horses" potentially in the race for the G. O. P. presidential nomination.

Steiwer's senatorial record has contributed to his eligibility as the possible republican standard bearer. He has been an ardent spokesman in promoting interest of veterans and is himself a World War veteran and active member of the American Legion. He also rates as a champion of the farmers. He has been an active rancher and wheat raiser and has expressed himself as against artificial crop cartels and for a systematic program of land conservation.

Steiwer an Able Orator
It is not inconceivable that the 1936 convention might mark a repetition of those conventions at which James A. Garfield and William Jennings Bryan won the nomination on the strength of the enthusiasm engendered by their powerful oratory.

His oratorical ability has in fact accounted in great measure for the phenomenal rise of Senator Frederick Steiwer. His training as a member of the debate team at college helped carry him to success in his first major campaign in 1924 when he ran for the United States senate against two strong opponents and defeated them.

Another factor which has been in his favor in politics has been the friendship and support of Ralph E. Williams of Oregon, vice-chairman of the republican national committee.

Career Recounted
Steiwer's political career began with his appointment as deputy district attorney for his native Umatilla county as district attorney in 1912. Five years later he was elected to the state senate only to have his career interrupted by the war in which he served as an artillery lieutenant.

Although his election to the senate in 1926 over the opposition of formidable opponents in both the primary and election indicated his popularity, his true strength was revealed in 1932 when he was re-elected despite an overwhelming vote for Roosevelt.

Steiwer is 52, married and has two children and gives his audience the impression of being a two-fisted dynamic westerner as he attacks his subject with all the energy of his 220-pound, six feet two frame.

Daily Devotions DR. CHARLES A. EDWARDS

A philosopher of a few years ago said there were two things which filled his soul with awe. The starry heavens above, and the moral law within. What a picture we have in the 19th Psalm. A psalm of the outer and inner law. Joseph Addison wrote: "The spacious firmament on high, With all the blue ethereal sky, And spangled heavens a shining frame, Their great Original proclaim." Eternal Father there is no light but Thine, without, within. May we walk in the light of Thy life. Amen.

ADULT PROGRAM TO CONTINUE IN JUNE

SALEM, June 8.—(AP)—The Oregon adult education program, which now has an enrollment of 10,545 under the direction of 252 teachers in 25 of the state's counties, will be continued at least through the month of June, after which more federal funds must be provided if it is to continue. Nelson J. Maaske, director, said today.

This year's program was started last December, Maaske said, and in addition to the adult courses, a nursery school program was incorporated with 19 schools with two teachers each.

Some of the most popular subjects taught in the state-wide program include Americanization and citizenship, economics, English, public speaking, first aid, parent education, domestic arts, hobbies, radio, psychology, music and mining. A score of other subjects are also taught.

The Lane county program, with an average weekly attendance of 300 under five teachers, is in charge of George C. Bertram, working under the direction of the city school superintendent. The nursery school unit at Eugene is conducted by two teachers and one cook and has a daily attendance of 26 children between the ages of 2 and 4 years.

The attendance in some of the other county units in the adult education include 79 in Baker, 291 in Benton, 429 in Douglas, 166 in Jackson, 142 in Josephine, 152 in Klaskan, 1,026 in Marion, 2,868 in Multnomah and 293 in Union county.
