LIKE Mark Twain's comment regarding the report of his death, the statement that the veterans are squandering and wasting their bonus money is "grossly exaggerated."

one end to the other with red literature... It has a big job on its hands, with a lot of competition. Nearly everybody, this year, is campaigning for the something-for-nothing vote.

CONGRESSMAN LEMKE, who is the new Union party's candidate for President, opens his campaign in Des Moines, in the big farm state of Iowa, with an attack on Secretary of Agriculture Wallace (who is an Iowa man, son of a great Iowa farm paper editor who won his greatness by thinking straight) and a scornful arraignment of AAA and its process tax.

AAA, he says, took a dollar out of the farmer's pocket and put a dime back and then shouted so loudly: "Look at the dime I gave you" that the farmer forgot the dollar he had lost.

LEMKE'S particular panacea for the farmer, it should be remembered, is a LAW guaranteeing the farmer big crops and high prices regardless of the weather, competition from abroad, insect pests, and all the other worries that in the past have turned the farmer's hair gray.

If you're a farmer and want to be rich and happy from now on, with never another worry, just vote for Lemke and his Union party.

At least, that's Lemke's story, and he'll stick to it until election.

BOY, how the politicians are fighting this year for the vote of the fellow who wants to live without work!

U. S. POLITICAL OBSERVATIONS

By BYRON PRICE (Chief of Bureau, The Associated Press, Washington.)

The Philadelphia convention is entitled to one blue ribbon, at least; no other convention ever tried so hard to escape the atmosphere of anticlimax.

Among the many inconsistencies of the convention system, none is more conspicuous than the re-nomination of a candidate.

As a rule the whole event lacks completely the vital dramatic element of surprise, and whatever color it has usually is frankly transparent.

Politicians have been wondering for years what to do about this. Possibly the democrats have found the answer.

G. O. P. Defers It, Too... Twice in recent years, under two entirely different sets of circumstances, the republicans have struggled with the problem in vain.

The party convention was almost as dull in 1924, when Coolidge was nominated with every prospect of carrying the White House, as it was in 1932, when Hoover was presented with a renomination which appeared almost worthless.

On each occasion, there was an effort to get up a degree of excitement over second place on the ticket, but the delegates did not appear really interested in that.

They went through the whole performance without straining a vocal cord or winking a collar.

In 1936 the democrats early foresaw that they would be under an even greater handicap than that usual under the circumstances, because their convention came second.

After the suspension of the republican meeting at Cleveland, where a half-dozen factions were punctured to lock aparts, who would be added, and recommissioned that up-lications of olive oil, cocoa butter or burn ointment be made before exposure as a means of lessening the probability of serious burns.

He also says that it is especially important that bathers see a doctor if the burns cover a wide area or if a fever develops.

Ivy Also Hazard... An unbelievable number of persons are poisoned by ivy, especially during the fourth of July holiday.

Mardi Gras Arranged... Hence the interminable string of receptions and parties, the pretty girls selling Roosevelt auto plates in hotel lobbies, the mammoth exposition of government activities, the parading round the Liberty bell, the dances and boxing matches, and finally the gala Saturday night extravaganza replacing the old-time notification ceremonies.

The psychological intent of it all was not, however, entirely negative. It purposed to go beyond a mere erasing of anticlimax, and accomplish an affirmative result.

The idea was, clearly, to make the occasion one of rejoicing, to give it a Mardi Gras top-dressing suggestive of triumph and exaltation.

It was designed to be the greatest, grandest party rally ever held, at which a democratic bandwagon was to be started rolling toward November.

One Word Led To Another

By Bugs Baer

Epit de corps in military circles consist mostly of keeping your face clamped when you spot something a bit serammy.

No matter what is wrong you are supposed to salute it.

In the last few years several officers have popped off their pants. And were given the bum's rush with epaulets. The old hattie axes flow off the handles.

The result was that they were investigated, reprimanded and set on the top shelf to cool off. All because they believed within hearing of the public.

For some reason or other the majors and the colonels seem to regard the army as a private institution and a philanthropic organization for the benefit of anybody above the rank of captain.

The tactics were changed a bit in the case of the last general who bunched his A out of turn. He was dismissed all right through regular military channels.

But he was reappointed by Washington. And resigned ten days later. If it had only been eleven days it might be claimed that he did it willingly. But ten days has a military ring. It's like the vest of the fat man who went on the eighteen-day diet. Taken in just to be let out again.

At no time can a general or an admiral squeak off the reservation. There is no law against them grousing, provided they bark in barracks or sing their operas sweet and low. If a muzzle-loading general starts unloading to the public, then that's the end of his military career.

The public pays for the army and navy. But the payments are in the form of alimony and totals devoid of co-operation, mutual admiration and romance.

Everything that happens in the army and navy is for the good of the service. That includes demotions, investigations and resignations. No matter what happens, it's a military secret.

We don't object to seeing them demilitarize a gabby general. Those three star birds spent their careers preventing majors and colonels from talking. Then the general shoots off his ten-ball roman candle and is bouted out, hoops and staves.

Those who want to talk should remember that the finest speeches are made just before graduation. That applies to both college students and generals.

Tragedy Toll Cited in Cautionary Rules Given for Independence Day Observance

SAN FRANCISCO, July 1.—Carelessness causes the majority of accidents and fatalities in Fourth of July celebrations and during the vacation season, says A. L. Schafer, Red Cross manager in the Pacific area, in an appeal to the public to help reduce the accidental loss of life this year.

At the same time he announced that a study made by Harold F. Enlow, national director of First Aid and Life-Saving for the American Red Cross, shows 4,290 Americans have been killed by fireworks during the past 30 years. The fatalities more than equal the number of colonists killed during the entire Revolutionary war.

Ivy Also Hazard... An unbelievable number of persons are poisoned by ivy, especially during the fourth of July holiday. The Red Cross first aid expert recommends that, when contact with ivy is known, the person wash thoroughly with soap and warm water four or five times, then wash with alcohol if it is available. Where the poison has developed he suggests the application of calamine lotion, which may be purchased from any drug store. The druggist should be requested to add enough carbolic acid to make a two per cent solution. This lotion is particularly useful around a camp.

In the treatment of snake-bite speed is essential, Mr. Enlow further points out. If no doctor is available immediately, the person, bitten, or a companion, should make a x-shaped cut about half an inch long through the skin at the site of each fang puncture. Suction should be produced continuously for half an hour. The mouth will be found effective if no other means of suction is available. Keep the patient warm and quiet and obtain the services of a doctor as soon as possible.

Returned to the cars has been received by Sheriff Percy Webb together with directions for the sale of the machines and distribution of proceeds to partially compensate the wool growers for their stolen property. Thornton said.
