AAA WORKING ON GRAZING PROGRAM

Ranchers Will Have Chance to Adjust Feeding Areas During Winter.

WASHINGTON, July 21.—(AP)—The AAA, officials said today, hopes shortly to submit to ranchers a soil conservation program for the vast grazing lands of the west.

Work is under way on a tentative plan and officials say they desire to have a program adopted by this fall so ranchers will have time during the winter to adjust their grazing areas.

Two major moves are being studied by the planners: 1. To arrange for ranchers to increase their supplemental feed crops to relieve the drain upon pasturage lands; 2. To encourage ranchers to begin grazing livestock later in the spring than at present and to take the livestock off the range earlier in the fall to conserve the grass.

The plan, it is understood, does not contemplate calling upon cattle and sheep raisers to reduce the number of their livestock. It is believed increases in supplemental feed crops will go far toward conserving the grazing lands. Participation in the program would be voluntary, with the government offering as an inducement certain cash payments to those planting feed crops. No specific figures on these payments are being made public yet.

This plan to regulate grazing aims to maintain the grass in the nation's grazing area, which officials estimate covers approximately 721,000,000 available acres of range land in eleven states.

Reliable reports, AAA men said, show that three-fourths of the range area has become less productive in the past, and weather records show that one to four drought years may be expected every ten years.

Farmed Portion Small

They measure the agricultural asset of grazing resources by the fact that in the eleven western states less than five per cent of the land is devoted to farming and the greater part of the remaining 95 per cent to grazing. They estimate that 65 per cent of the feed for western livestock is range forage.

George E. Farrell, director of the western division of the soil conservation program, estimates the value of the western livestock at $500,000,000. Ranches and equipment investments are estimated at more than a million dollars.

He has said that success of a grazing conservation program would depend upon the ranchers' cooperation.

Sues Specialist
