Who Will Pay?

With the exception of the Scandinavian countries, Holland and Switzerland, which have no vaulting ambitions and customarily attend strictly to their own business, Europe is intensely occupied these days in building up a back-breaking financial burden for generations yet unborn.

Europe is spending money which it doesn't have in its coffers and cannot bring from its people. This expenditure is not for the promotion of economic recovery, not for the amelioration of the distress of humanity. It is an investment in total loss and the day of reckoning cannot be deferred indefinitely.

The desperate financial condition of Germany is, of course, quite well known. While Hitler has been preoccupied with the development of his military establishment and with the oppression of racial and religious elements of the German people, there has been a constant weakening of the financial structure.

Even before the Ethiopian adventure, Italy's finances were in bad way and the situation has been made increasingly critical by the costs of the African operations, and the continued expansion of the army has produced both higher taxation and mounting debt.

As a matter of self-protection, France must maintain the pace set by neighbors of questionable purposes, while Russia, menaced on the east and the west, is compelled to divert attention from the working out of her experiment in government to the preservation of her security.

Japan, whose people have long been reduced to virtual slavery by the necessity of maintaining an army and navy whose proportions cannot be justified by her resources, adds to the raucous chorus with her announcement of accelerated submarine construction.

Who is going to pay for the millions under arms, the planes, the forts and ships, the bullets and bombs and for the destruction certain to come in the future? If the generations of a later date are weak and supine, they will probably pay.

If not, the world will doubtless witness in many lands a France of 1793, when Louis XVI was King and Marie Antoinette was queen; another Russia of 1919, when Nicholas and Alexandra ended their reign, another Spain of the present day. Europe is sowing the wind and inevitably must reap the whirlwind.

Driving at Eighty.

PRESIDENT EMBERTUS A. LAWRENCE LOWELL, of Harvard, undoubtedly possesses unimpaired those great gifts of intellect that made him a distinguished educator and scholar, even though he is approaching eighty.

It would be unreasonable to assume, however, that all of his physical senses are as acute and his reactions as swift and accurate as they were when the burden of the years rested less heavily upon him.

Under a law of Massachusetts which requires the reexamination of all automobile drivers after they have reached the age of 65, Dr. Lowell has again taken the test and, in consequence, will be denied a license upon the expiration of the one which he now holds.

Being an eminently sensible person, Dr. Lowell undoubtedly realizes that the law is reasonable and just, even though it is denying him a privilege which he regarded as important.

when automobiles are manned by drivers who, by reason of lack of physical strength and alertness, are unable to act swiftly in the successive crises that are routine incidents of a day's driving.

common people of other lands. That is what our constitution has done for us.

But just getting a constitution isn't enough. If the liberties of the people are to be preserved, the constitution must be retained.

In the old world, constitutions have been secured and then LOST. Italy and Germany are notable and recent examples. In Italy and Germany, where supreme power has been seized by dictators, the people have NO RIGHTS which the dictators are bound to respect.

That is what happens when constitutions are LOST.

But you will say at once, "what has happened in Italy and Germany (and other countries) can't happen here."

Let's see about that. The supreme court is the interpreter of the constitution. The supreme court is composed of nine OLD MEN. It is quite possible that within ONE YEAR five of these old men, or a majority of the court, might die. In that event, their successors would be appointed by the President.

The men so appointed would serve for the rest of their lives.

Let us suppose that in the year these five old men died the office of President was held by a man who was contemptuous of the constitution (regarding it, perhaps, as a relic of horse and buggy days) and who desired to change the whole method of its interpretation, so that things might be done which the constitution forbids. (Including infringements upon the liberties of the people.)

Let us suppose also that at this time the congress was composed of supine individuals willing to accept ANY ACT OR WISH of the President as a dispensation from or high, to be concurred in without debate, and that those appointments of the President were confirmed by the senate.

Suppose, then, that these five men chose to IGNORE the constitution, or to interpret it strictly according to the wishes of the President.

IN THAT event, the constitution, so far as protection of the rights of the people is concerned, would be DEAD, and we would be dependent for our liberties upon the will of a dictator.

So, you see, it COULD happen here.

WE HAVE come to take the benefits received under the constitution for granted, like the benefits of sunshine and fresh air. But, if we become too careless, we COULD LOSE these benefits. Other peoples have.

It will pay us NOT to become careless.

THE WORLD WITH A FENCE A New Novel by Marian Sims

SYNOPSIS: Carol Torrance has a job in Atlanta. She has a considerable employer, by name Blake Thornton, and she has some amusing friends. She wanted just this, and she should be happy. The only trouble is that she cannot disregard the obvious fact that Blake and his wife are not happy. Irma Thornton spends her summers in the mountains, and her winters in Florida. Blake has spent the last weekend with Irma—and he certainly did not look to Carol like a man who expected to enjoy himself when he left. Chapter 28: Blake dropped several sheets of paper on Carol's desk. "The Acme Cleaners have just installed the Martex equipment, and they want a quarter-page ad about it. Here's the technical information; you'll know how much of it a customer would be interested in." She nodded without speaking, and began to study the information. The hands of her watch said half-past three; she would just about have time to finish this afternoon. She took it to him at five o'clock, and waited while he read it. Probably, she thought without resentment, he wouldn't like it at all. He read it through and checked. "You do take down your back hair with 'em, don't you?" He added carelessly. "If you don't mind waiting ten minutes I'll drive you home." She said frankly: "I'd wait an hour to avoid that street car." "It must be awful. Tell the other girls I'll take them too; they're off my beat, but they probably feel the same way." The four of them talked very little during the drive to West End. Within the office they were at ease, bound by a common interest. Outside its walls, and in Blake's presence, they were strangers to each other, and their talk was shouted across a gulf of different backgrounds. At their own doors Freddie and Laura thanked him profusely, and were engaged by their own homes. When they were alone Carol said abruptly: "Blake, it's perfectly insane for you to work all here to avoid that street car." "It's not insane," he said, "but you're not to be paid for it. Why on earth don't you go to Rockbrook for at least a week or ten days?" He turned his head and smiled briefly at her. "Have you ever seen Rockbrook?" "No, but I've seen several of its cousins. Even if it bores you, you ought to have several days of rest. Bored people usually get fat, don't they? Fat and bored; they go to gather like lame and eggs." "Maybe. I'd rather be thin." "Then go somewhere else." "I can't afford to go anywhere, child." "Rot. You can't afford not to." "Well, I'm not going to, so you might as well save your thought, but the hotel's very good. Not, he added softly, after several seconds, "that I'm not flattered as the devil to have it." She sighed, and gave him up. For the rest of the way they sat wrapped in their own thoughts. At the Sherwood she faced him impulsively, moved by the loneliness that he, so often behind his eyes, "Why don't you come in and have dinner with me?" He shook his head. "Let you cook for me on a night like this? You're a peach to suggest it, but I wouldn't think of it. He added recklessly: "Suppose I come back in an hour or so and get you to have dinner with me?" "No. I've done that twice already. I've food in the refrigera-

SHIRLEY TRIUMPHS IN GREATEST FILM Yesterday at the Indian theatre Shirley Temple came to town in a new suit that is by far and away the greatest film she has ever made. To a packed audience of the little star's admirers (and who isn't?) "The Poor Little Rich Girl" flashed across the screen in a blaze of melody, laughter and romance and left the cheering throng delighted with the knowledge that Shirley had topped even the greatest of her past hits. Here is Shirley in all her glory in a song-filled, laugh-laden story that is one of the crowning cinematic achievements of this or any other year. Five melodious new song hits—and really hits!—are featured in the production. The numbers, all authored by those famous Hollywood songwriters, Mack Gordon and Harry Revel, are "When I'm With You," "But Definitely," "You've Gotta Eat Your Spinach, Baby," "Oh, My Goodness" and "Military Man." On the same bill is a new all-color Mickey Mouse cartoon, "Alpine Antics," with those popular stars, Donald Duck, Pluto and Mickey Mouse. S., will speak at 7:45 tonight on the Jewish question, "The Greatest Prophecy of the Bible." Dr. Stevenson was formerly a British medical officer on the staff of General Lord Allenby in the British expedition against the Turks in Palestine. He was with Allenby at the surrender of Jerusalem, and was a member of the Royal Geographical society, he has done original research for that body. Dr. Stevenson has traveled widely and is an authority on the South Sea Islands, where he was for a number of years a medical missionary under the Scotch church. Those who heard him in a previous lecture here on "The Head Hunters of the South Seas" will be glad to hear this interesting lecturer again. In making this announcement, the Presbyterian church invites Roseburg to share the pleasure of this unusual speaker. The lecture is free. GLENDALE BOY SUFFERS INJURY GLENDALE, Ore., Sept. 21.—George Matthews, 12-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. George H. Matthews, narrowly escaped what might have been a bad accident Friday noon. He was playfully scuffling with his sister, Margaret, when he accidentally thrust his right arm through a glass window in the door, resulting in bad cuts on the back of his hand and his forearm. Dr. A. J. Fawcett took nineteen stitches. Luckily no tendons nor arteries were severed. FIRE DESTROYS GLENDALE HOME GLENDALE, Ore., Sept. 21.—About three o'clock in the morning Saturday, the family of Mrs. Mabel Tracey awakened by smoke and cracking to find their home afire. The alarm was sounded but before the volunteer fire department could arrive at the house, which was located on a hillside, the entire roof fell in. All furniture was saved, but the house burned to the ground. It was a four-room frame dwelling owned by W. S. Parize, who lives out of town.
