POET'S CORNER

WHEN FORESTS BURN G. M. LEEPER The forest sleep By nature true— So calm and peaceful In the dew.

Then low—across The shades of night, There shown a distant Gleam of light.

That caused forest Trees so tall, To quiver there And quickly fall.

Where forests stood So noble and grand Naught but blackened Monuments stand.

Death—like a demon Of the night, Filled the forest With its burning light.

Filled the paths So shady and cool, Burned the flowers And ferns— By the murmuring pool.

Burned the trees Only God can make, Sacrificing lives, Causing hearts to break.

While forests sway To death and burn, And mountain slopes To destruction turn.

Nature's forests Should not be lost, With lives and trees To pay the cost.

Let us live with nature And love her ways, And keep her forests For future days.

Let us do our best To protect What God hath made, And save the life Of a forest glade.

We send a message One and all must take, Praying to forest danger Hearts of men awake.
