MIGRATION CAUSES NEW FARM PROBLEM

PORTLAND, Ore., Oct. 12.—(AP)—About 8,800 families from the drought-stricken middle west have migrated to the three north-west states since last January. H. E. Selby, chief of the land use planning section of the reclamation administration said today.

Idaho was first with 4,557 new families because, Selby said, it was the first state in the line of migration from the midwest drought areas.

Washington had 2,329 and Oregon 1,920 families.

Pointing out there was sufficient farm land but that only 1,100 farm units were available for rent or lease, Selby said unadjusted settlement would intensify relief, tax delinquency, high cost of public facilities and other evils of poor land areas.

Of Washington's 2,329 new families, 1,327 require relief and 212 need new farm loans. He said 469 were self-supporting and there are 446 farm units available.

In Idaho half will need $10, 410 will require loans and 1,956 are self supporting. There are 245 available farm units.

Of Oregon's 1,920 new families, 1,315 will need relief, 454 loans, and 152 are self-supporting. There are 357 farm units.

HOUSEWIVES TURN TABLES ON LABOR

SEATTLE, Oct. 12.—(AP)—Union labor, engaged in picketing several Seattle businesses, found itself picketed today when a score of women suddenly started an unheralded picket line around the labor temple.

They carried flags and wore sandwich sign demanding the reopening of the strike-closed Post-Intelligencer. Hearst morning paper closed by American newspaper guild pickets August 12.

The women declined to state their names; disclaimed any organization or sponsorship, and said they were "just Seattle housewives and good Americans."

One policeman appeared, took care of the sudden traffic congestion caused by curious motorists and pedestrians, then went on his beat.

The pickets told interviewers they had no connection with the Post-Intelligencer and refused to talk to one newspaper woman whom they characterized as a "guild member."

The picketing contingent said there were 150 Seattle housewives on call and that they would take turns picketing until their feet got tired, and until the Post-Intelligencer is permitted to resume publication.

Charles Boyle, central labor council secretary, said he had told Police Chief W. E. Severyn to insure that the women were permitted to picket, and to arrest anyone who "insulted them." He and other union labor officials walked through the picketline to their offices.

SIX MILLION SPENT DAILY FOR LIQUOR

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—(AP)—The bill for alcoholic beverages in the United States since the end of prohibition was placed by the American Business Men's Research foundation at $8,000,000,000.

The organization said it used government figures and current retail prices for its basis in calculating the expenditure per family in post-prohibition's 40 months at $250.85.

During the period extending from the re-legalization of beer in April, 1935, to Aug. 1, 1936, the organization placed the nation's drinking bill at an average of $6,708,000 a day. Purchases, the report added, amounted to $46,900,200 a week and $203,258,000 a month.

The foundation said liquor drinking had increased 18 per cent and beer drinking 16 per cent in the fiscal year of 1936 as compared with the same period last year, while the amount spent by consumers had increased 21 per cent.
