HIGHWAY PLANTING

PART OF ROAD JOB

Program Embracing 5,000 Miles Involves Cost of Seven Million.

Improvement of roadways by landscape grading, seeding, sodding and planting has become increasingly popular in recent years. Since 1933 it has been required that each state include roadside improvement projects in its program of work to be done with federal funds administered by the bureau of public roads. The total program—completed, under improvement, and planned—includes 1,319 sections of road improved according to plans prepared by landscape specialists. Roadways have been, or are being improved on approximately 5,000 miles of highway at a cost of more than $7,000,000, of which the federal government is contributing more than $6,000,000.

Most of these improvements are on main arteries of travel at the roadside to the more important centers of population and much of the work has been done along existing surfaced highways.

Several features of roadside improvement work that have come to the attention of highway engineers as a result of the objectless demonstrations have been adopted to simplify highway construction practice in several of the states. Among the practices adopted are: flatter grading of slopes and stone rounding; reduction in the depth of ditches; elimination of "barrows" or a better "cleaning" of the roadside after construction is completed; and saving of trees and other volunteer growth, the conservation of natural beauty where feasible for later use in ground cover protection, the planting of natural snow barriers, and the construction of small parking areas at scenic outlooks. Several states in building new roads are doing a much of this work as right-of-way clearing.

State highway department organizations are providing for an improved technical approach to the various roadside problems, and as experience is accumulated, they are developing more effective methods of handling the work. Only a few years ago, highways were completed with little thought to the appearance of the finished roadway and attempts were made to "beautify" the roadside conditions already had and often with unsympathetic or even counterproductive kind of planting. Results have been much better since roadside improvement has been considered as an integral part of highway construction. It is now thought following construction.

ASSERTED BADGER GAME HOLDS FOUR

PORTLAND, Nov. 24.—(AP)—An asserted badger game resulted today in the detention of four persons by police, including the alleged victim.

Willis Lavender told detectives that Julia Wathen, 22, induced him to buy her some drinks and then went to an apartment.

He asserted that Fred K. Looney appeared and threatened him for association with his (Looney's) wife. Lavender said he gave the couple $50.

The woman and Looney denied the charges, the woman claiming Lavender came to her apartment while she was there. Looney said he did not draw a revolver or threaten Lavender or receive any money.

The fourth person held was William Doss, 35, a bartender, from whom Lavender claimed he bought the drinks.

POET'S CORNER

JUNIOR'S THANKSGIVING DREAM

By Maud Culp
I had a dream the other night
All about Thanksgiving.
I dreamed that our old gobolier
Turk
Was wide awake and living.
And I was in his wire cage
Feeling so forlorn,
When Mr. Turkey brought my lunch—
A great big pail of corn.

He looked at me with knowing eye
And said my gills were red;
It was a shame that soon
He must cut off my head.
Then I awoke and hurried out
And opened his cage wide.
I told him to hurry down the road
—Get in the woods and hide.

When Daddy went to get the axe
I stayed a step behind.
I knew he'd be pretty mad
When Turk he could not find.
Then Daddy said, "He's gone!"
I really felt quite gay.
Although we ate no turkey,
I liked Thanksgiving day.

FALL GOOD TIME TO KILL RODENTS

CORVALLIS — Fall and early winter are good times to carry on a campaign for the control of rodents, moles, rats and squirrels, says County Agent W. S. Averill. As the ground becomes moist, gophers and moles will be working nearer the surface, and it is an opportune time to use the recognized methods of control, he points out. As the stormy weather comes on, rats will enter buildings, establishing their winter quarters. Feed sacks will be spoiled and the rats will start feeding on stored feed and seed.
