POET'S CORNER

ANTICIPATION

(The following poem was printed in the November issue of The Running Tide, a paper published by the Cunard-White Star Steamship company in New York City. The poem is beautifully illustrated with a two tone cut of the coast of Barbados.)

I cannot think but that, some day, I shall be sailing far away Upon those calm enchanting seas That thread the dreaming Caribbean.

To drift from isle to golden isle— To live with each a little while; Spend amber day and silver night Immersed in hours of sheer delight To savor every wind that blows From Isle of Pines to Barbados; This would, I feel, be Paradise; If not, at least it would suffice For one who drifts endlessly.

Yet long with passion for the sea, I cannot think but that, some day, I shall, in truth, sail far away. —Marjorie Hunt Pettit.

THOUGHTS

Consider the lily so pure and white Sweet fragrance it gives to the world When strolling in gardens, puts to flight A sadness of heart a new life unfurled.

The past seems but a fleeting dream As eyes are focused on valley and mountain 'Tis then we feel the things unseen. As one's thirst is quenched at the crystal fountain.

Time goes on, no one can hinder As God has made in His great plan But may this Christmas thought still linger All through life's remaining span. —By De Witt Talmadge.

SIXTEEN ALL

Fifteen boys, all bright and strong Studying hard all day long. There's not a girl in our school "To help one another" is our rule. Believe it or not for this is true: Seven sets of brothers and another boy, too.

Alphabetically, Paul and Harry Anderson Happy fellows, chuck full of fun; The Bauer boys, Jimmie and Bobby.

Heathen brothers you ever did see? Virgil and Alvin Keatonson. Who come to work on a run; Then Charles and Harold Minter, There are no boys better; Dale and Donald Mode come next, Sweet tempered and seldom vexed; Their cousins, Walter and Johnny Mode follow.

Dependable with never a foe; The Smith brothers—Bill and Haldeane.

Fine fellows and never mean; Last is the one without a brother, Another dear boy is Claude Green Junior.

There are no better boys ever made Than these fifteen of the Kellogg school Who daily come to learn their rule.

Is there another school in Oregon Like this one six miles from Elkton? —By Mrs. Ernest D. Wade.

CONVERSION FROM ATHEISM RELATED

Evangelist Ralph Underwood, converted atheist, spoke to a large audience at the Poursquare Gospel church last night on "The Amazing Experience of My Godless Partner." He told how that Mr. Charles at one time a minister, fell from his faith in God and became an atheist. After much sorrow and failing health through the strain of lecturing and debating and writing for the cause of atheism he decided to end his life. As he walked down the street to the point where he had decided to put an end to his life, a couple car stood on the corner playing sacred records. The words were familiar to him and meant his decision that
