Fighting A Disease.

THE fight against tuberculosis, aided so greatly by the sale of Christmas seals, goes on unconsciously.

Though it is a nation-wide fight—yes, even world-wide—it is as local as each household and every penny contributed helps toward eradicating the disease—toward saving lives.

In an article by W. H. Mytinger, M. D. of Lafayette, Indiana, we find the following: "Now, we know, thanks to the tuberculin test, and careful post mortem study, that so-called 'childhood tuberculosis' is merely the first manifestation of tuberculosis and the prognosis is very good without secondary infection taking place."

"Not long ago we looked on the child who was ten per cent under average weight as being suspicious of having tuberculosis. . . . Weight has practically no relation to first infection tuberculosis."

"Next came the 'contact' child: That is the child living in a home with an infected individual. This was a great step forward as a large number of our infected children are found in this group. It is interesting to note that the younger children are usually more heavily infected than the older ones, due to the fact that the source of contact usually suffers from progressive disease and particularly is this so if it is the mother or who is ill. . . . A tuberculous mother unknowingly infects her children. Of these, some may die in infancy or childhood, while others may grow to early adult life only to fall a victim of the disease. Perhaps they are married and have children who in turn become infected."

"Obviously the proper thing to do is to break this vicious circle and we attempt to do this by removing either the patient or the children from the home at the earliest moment. This method while very useful has two serious drawbacks. It catches in its net many contacts who have not yet become contaminated while at the same time missing the large group whose infection is not brought about in the home and in most of whom the source of the contact cannot be ascertained."

"This brings in the modern method of case finding which is coming more and more into use. It consists in the application of the skin test and the X-raying of those who react positively. It is a procedure well adapted to the individual patient as well as to large numbers such as our public schools, university or industrial groups. From a practical as well as a scientific standpoint this marks a revolutionary advance. Through its use we are better able to understand our local tuberculosis problem, to better and earlier select those who need supervision or active treatment and, from year to year, to measure with a reasonable degree of accuracy the results of our efforts at control."

supported by local public opinion. LET us summarize: The Brites shot down two police officers, accompanied by a volunteer citizen, who had been sent to arrest them. They fled, but later gave themselves up and were tried, alleging that the killings were done in self-defense. The jury disbelieved this claim, and found them guilty. The Brites have not yet been sentenced. But if they are sentenced and if the sentence is carried into execution without interruption and they are hanged as the law of California provides in the case of condemned murderers, it is highly probable that in the future there will be FEWER LYNCHINGS IN NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.

POPE TO BROADCAST YULETIDE MESSAGE

Decision Dismays Vatican's Doctors, Who Fear Pius Can't Stand Strain.

VATICAN CITY, Dec. 22.—(AP)—Pope Pius XII, who has been ill since the Christmas eve message he will broadcast to the world. A semi-official Vatican bulletin said his health "continues to improve."

Prelate said the holy father, in the radio message he will make at 12:30 p. m. Thursday (6:30 a. m. eastern standard time) probably will place emphasis on the grave conditions which afflict the world, and will expound the principles through which humanity may win salvation. Vatican sources said the pope's physicians were dismayed by the holy father's intention to broadcast his Christmas message to the cardinal. The doctors were said to be none too sure the holy father would be able to stand the exertion. The pontiff spent another restless night with his sleep troubled by shortness of breath and pain in his swollen legs. An official statement yesterday said the pope "is compelled to remain motionless because of the various conditions of his left leg, but nothing has occurred to make his situation worse, or to cause any alarm concerning his general condition."

NEW YORK, Dec. 22.—(AP)—American networks will join in the Thursday morning broadcast of Pope Pius' Christmas message to the world. Time for the transmission has been set for 6:30 a. m. (eastern standard time) via the combined WBAF-WJZ-NBC and WABC-CBS networks. It is expected an English translation will follow the pope's address in Latin.

Daily Devotions

DR. CHARLES A. EDWARDS Perhaps biography makes about the finest and most helpful type of literature that we can read. There have been so many lives that have been fine and good in so many ways that to suggest reading about them is to suggest reading about the source of stimulus and wisdom and inspiration that we cannot afford to neglect. Life would never be pessimistic or unsatisfying for any of us, if we kept ourselves familiar with the story of the lives and deeds of good men, whose record is crowed the pages of human history. We thank Thee, O God, for the record of faithfulness and courage and loyalty to truth and great souls have wrought into the story of man's life upon the earth. Amen.

GLITTERING GIRL

by May Christie

CHAPTER XXI "Dat to thinking people, love can be controlled. If one feels oneself getting to the danger point, there are a number of safe courses to pursue." I thought you were Sir Galahad—now you talk like Socrates or some stuffy old philosopher," Vernon laughed shrilly. He smiled at her. There was something whimsical in his smile. "Why not like me to that other ancient Greek philosopher—the one who tried to extract the maximum of sweetness from each flying minute?"

"Minutes like this? You enjoy them for the time being, and then wisely forget all about them, like a canny bachelor. Is that it?" It was spoken like a challenge. What would Terry say in answer to it? Seated in that fashionable night spot, the Desert Oasis, and looking at Vernon's flushed and lovely face, that—despite her efforts at badinage—had a hurt disappointment on it, Terry said gently: "Back in the wilds of New Mexico, this night in the Desert Oasis, with you, you will be like an oasis in my memory." She flushed. "That's much too good. It sounds like something out of a silly novel." "I stand corrected. I grant you I'm a poor hand at making pretty speeches." "No one's requiring you to make pretty speeches," she was angry now. Evidently he despised women in his heart. She would take the hint from him. What had he said? Something about withdrawing immediately one felt oneself at the danger point? . . . That "love could be controlled."

"I'm sorry if I've offended you, my dear. Living the last few years in the back of beyond has made me stupid in what shall I say—the social amenities." She had unfastened the bunch of violets from her gown before she had danced with Terry. She raised them to her face now, delicately sniffing their fragrance. "I still maintain that the girl in the play tonight was terribly selfish. Now if you had been in the man's shoes. . . . She was terribly afraid that he would answer: 'But I should never have been in the man's place. I should never marry a girl with so much money.' He did nothing of the sort. He might never be carried away by a merely pretty face. Before I got to the marrying point I would satisfy myself as to her real character. That's the trouble with American marriages today. They're based on what you girls call 'sex appeal' only. That's perfectly alright. They don't last. How can they? The girls marry with the firm determination that if it isn't sex, they'll step it out of it and into another marriage. There's nothing sacred in their point of view. They think a marriage that lasts is old-fashioned." "Not all girls," Vernon ventured to remark. "The girls in the crowd you're going with all do. They marry purely as an experiment. . . . You can see it while the gown's on. Sacrifice nothing. Marriage gives them a certain freedom that an unmarried girl is not supposed to have—a safety in pursuing other affairs. Don't look so startled, little country girl! It's as well to be your eyes open to what's going on around you." She thought: "The married

YORK ARCHBISHOP RAPS FORMER KING

Edward's Decision Not One of Man of Honor, High Cleric Implies.

YORK, England, Dec. 22.—(AP)—The archbishop of York broke his silence on the abdication of King Edward VIII today and, in a speech before the House of Commons, implied that the monarch's decision would not have been made by a man of honor. The archbishop, in the course of a speech before the House of Commons, implied the monarch's decision would not have been made by a man of honor. The archbishop, in the course of a speech before the House of Commons, implied the monarch's decision would not have been made by a man of honor.

"It has happened that many a man before now has found himself unwilling to fall in love with another man's wife. That's the moment of the critical decision and the right decision is that they should cease to meet before passion is developed as to create an agonizing conflict between love and duty. That decision has often been taken by men of honor." The archbishop of York, who ranks second only to Canterbury in the Church of England, declared any kind of life which conflicts with duty is "not the love of which the gospel speaks."

November wind blew through his thin overcoat. He shivered, and cursed a little. But if all went well, he told himself he would shortly be able to afford a sublimed overcoat. He smiled at his own svelte reflection in a passing shop window, twirling his cane in the well-known "man about town" manner. Millions they had. The little girl was quite a peach. Decent, respectable people with a strong strain of the bourgeois. That meant they wouldn't tolerate scandal, nor an ill breath to touch the reputation of their beloved daughter.

ALFALFA EYED IN QUARANTINE EDICT

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 22.—(AP)—Don C. Mote, state entomologist, will make a survey of stacked hay in Baker county to determine whether alfalfa weevil exists, the state department of agriculture announced today when a Baker county delegation urged assistance from Governor Martin in having the weevil quarantine lifted. Mote said he believed it possible that the weevil would not remain in the hay and that it would be safe to bale and ship during the winter months, but declared it would be necessary to make the investigation before permission to ship could be obtained from other states who have placed a quarantine on hay in Baker and Lincoln counties. Governor Martin also requested Leo A. Strong, chief of the bureau of entomology at Washington, to assist in making the investigation in the hopes a competent federal entomologist may be assigned to investigate the area. The quarantine of alfalfa weevil was put out is based upon federal findings entirely. The delegation told the governor about $200,000 worth of hay was tied up in Baker county without a market because of the quarantine.
