SENATOR FAVORS DICTIONARY TRIM

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—(AP)—Senator Henry Fountain Ashurst—long a student of the English language—advocated today that the nation forget some of the words cluttering up the dictionaries.

"We have a wonderful language," he said, "but it is becoming unwieldy. It could be a good thing to call a conference of authorities and abolish some of our verbal coracles."

The Arizona senator—recognized as packing one of the most remarkable vocabularies in congress—has dipped into the national language and made some novel disclosures.

"Every 100 words spoken by an educated American," he said, "fall into four general classifications. They are: 60, Anglo-Saxon; 20, Latin; 5, Greek; 5, other languages. Two words for which Ashurst has no use are 'very' and 'quite.'"

Either of them tends to weaken, not strengthen your speech, he said. "You will hear neither in my office," he added, "for we have abolished them."

A casual visitor to the office sometimes is startled by efforts toward a more picturesque speech. For instance:

"Give me the flex," said the senator to his secretary. "The flex" turned out to be Ashurst's speech on the donkey, and contained a good example of his colorful language.

"The donkey is the personification of the sublime virtues of moderation, forbearance, restraint and civil economy. From the vibrant chords of his throat there come zig-zag bars of music as thrilling as the midnight minstrel of the nightingale."

Incidentally, Ashurst is a democrat.
