GLITTERING GIRL
 by May Christie

CHAPTER XXXVI

The book gradually slipped from her fingers to the floor, her eyes closed. She was emotionally tired, she thought.

"She had a wonderful dream . . . that Terry Shannon knelt before her . . . that Terry told her that he loved her. . . ."

She awoke suddenly. Was it still a dream? Terry in the flesh stood before her!

"I phoned your apartment. The maid told me you'd come here. I followed at once to take you right out of this, Vernon."

She blinked at him. She smiled sleepily. She said: "I knew you'd come, Terry."

But Terry didn't smile. He said brusquely: "You've no business to be here. Of all things, you have to pick the night when the police are going to raid the place."

"I told this man 'Why?' Vernon was still dazed from her wonderful dream that had now changed to a dear reality. She stared up at Terry.

"Because gambling happens to be illegal in New York, and there are other counts against this house as well. I've just warned your mother. She's lost $1500. She insists on writing her check for the amount. She's getting on her wraps now."

"And what about 'Foggy'—'Tody'—what's his name? Where's he?"

Terry said sharply: "He can take care of himself, but it seems you can't, you silly little thing! I'm in command now. Get your coat and you and your mother and I will be off while the going's good!"

They went down to the main floor where Sadie Tyson, considerably disgruntled, joined them. It was unlikely that the boy "Tody" would pay any of the loss. He had pointed out, in his well-bred, superior way, that it was entirely her own fault. And after all, $1500 was a tidy sum to part with!

"She bewailed all this to Terry Shannon in a loud voice.

"Mother, let's go. Mr. Shannon came all the way here to get us out before the police raid the place," Vernon whispered to her mother.

"And how did Mr. Shannon know that we were here?" Sadie gave them both a sharp look.

"Never mind now, darling. It's dangerous to waste time. Let's hurry."

"What's all this stupid nonsense about a raid? How could Mr. Shannon know about it unless he's in cahoots with the police?"

Irritated as he was, Terry couldn't help snuffing at that. She was so like a ruffled little pointer when she was angry.

"Well, if you insist on leaving, and not giving me a fair chance to win my money back, you can just wait right here for me till I fix my hair and powder my nose." Mrs. Tyson departed. She was gone for fully five minutes.

The three of them were almost at the front door when they were halted by their tracks by a sudden and alarming knocking from outside. Almost at the same moment, warning bells whirred upstairs in the gambling rooms, and a great iron door swung to at the top of the stairs, cutting off that part of the house from the invaders.

"The police! The raid's on!" Terry said sharply.

"Oh, Lord!" gasped Mrs. Tyson, thoroughly alarmed. She clutched her arm. "For heaven's sake, get us away quickly!"

He refrained from the obvious

Business As Usual

"We're going to stop in a minute and get right into my car and drive up to Greenwich—Vernon—and this night be married!"

"Oh, Terry—I'd love to—but mother—"

"She'll agree once the deed's done and it's all over. She'll have to make the best of a bad bargain."

"You're not a bad bargain. You're clever and handsome and simply wonderful!"

"Terry rose. 'I'm going directly in and tell your father what we're going to do tonight.'"

"No, darling—not now—he might stop us—I couldn't bear that!"

But Jake Tyson, full of sympathy for both, and impelled by his love for his daughter, had stolen to the open door of the dining room and heard the Greenwich proposal.

As he tiptoed back into the dining room, he decided then and there that this was the best thing that could happen. It would end the Park Avenue struggle which he loathed with all his simple heart. And it would bring real happiness to Vernon, for he knew intuitively that she did love this young chap.

"We're going for a little ride, darling," said Vernon to him at this moment, poking her head inside the dining room door. "Don't be alarmed if we're gone a couple of hours. We'll be right back."

Jake made no demur at the strangeness of this suggestion. But as he nodded, his eyes twinkled sympathetically.

The clock was chiming a quarter to three in the morning when Vernon returned to the apartment on the arm of her father.

Mrs. Tyson, nervous after the raid, was awake, and Jake sitting with her.

"Mother darling," exclaimed Vernon as she entered the bedroom, and still clinging to Terry, "I want you to call off my coming-out-party and send out other announcements."

"Announcements? Of what?" gasped Sadie, staring at the young couple.

"Of our marriage, darling. Terry and I just drove up to Greenwich—we're married, mother! Oh, darling, won't you please congratulate us? I'm so happy!"

"Married?—Mr. Tyson? Terry cut in, with shining eyes. "Will you forgive me? I'll take the greatest care of her. I'll honestly devote my life to making her happy."

"Bless you, my children," said Jake. "Now we can go right back home and live where we belong—in Texas, Sadie! From now on, we're going to give this Park Avenue stuff the go-by!"

To Vernon's astonishment, and Jake's too, Mrs. Tyson held out her arms to her daughter and son-in-law.

"It's all for the best," she declared. "I'm real glad I've a good reason now for calling off that delectable party!"

FIRST EAGLES CLUB OPPORTUNITY OPEN

Either Canyonville or Sutherlin has an opportunity to become the first community in the United States to organize an Eagles club, according to Dr. H. B. Scoffield, secretary of the Eagles lodge here. The honor will go to the community which first completes its organization efforts now being made.

According to authorization given at the last national convention of the lodge, communities may organize clubs of 25 or more lodge members. These clubs may maintain medical service and hold their own meetings.

The plan originated in Oregon of Roseburg.

The Roseburg lodge is preparing to take 50 or more candidates to Marshfield January 12, where initiation ceremonies will be conducted by Dr. H. B. Marrhman of Sacramento, grand worthy president. A bus is being chartered to provide transportation for the candidates.

The last meeting of the Roseburg lodge was followed by a smoker, which featured two four-round exhibition bouts, one by Joe Corbett of Roseburg, and Billy Farris of Rockford, Conn., the other by Ghu Stephens and Young Colison, both of Roseburg.

THOSE who had hoped for some compromise with net fishermen improving the fishing season so far as the up-river fishing is concerned, are finally completely discouraged. It is more apparent now than ever before that the net fishermen will not willingly permit their activities to be curtailed.

Accordingly, all activities of conservationists are now centered upon one objective—that of closing all coastal streams in Oregon except, of course the Columbia, to net fishing.

It is the only answer. The net fishing in the small coastal streams is a starvation business. It is likewise a destructive business for the fish commission of the state of Oregon has proven its inability to maintain fish in the streams. The fish resource, the second greatest natural resource of the state is being rapidly destroyed.

The legislature which convenes Monday will have an opportunity to vote either for or against the ultimate elimination of fish in Oregon streams.

Not Involved.

THE United States will not become involved in the "little world war" being fought in Spain. The congress, as its first action after convening in formal session, voted to place a heavy embargo upon war material shipments to Spain. Had this action not been taken this country would have been used as a source of supply for the contenders in that bloody civil war.

Most of Europe is involved one way or another in the Spanish conflict. Mostly the partisanship of the various countries is maintained secretly but it exists nevertheless.

Why is Europe so concerned with what the Spaniards do? The reason is that a decision between the principles of fascism and communism are to be determined. If the fascist win Italy and Germany will have an important ally. If the communists (loyalist government) succeed in putting down the revolt the Spanish government will continue as a communist controlled country.

Thanks to the quick action of congress we are not in danger of becoming either directly or indirectly involved.

Daily Devotions
 DR. CHARLES A. EDWARDS

After all there is nothing quite so good and so satisfying as that a man by his obedience and devotion and self-sacrifice should find his soul to be at peace with God. There are many things that add joy and pleasure to daily living, but if this one great thing is lacking, there is nothing that can atone for the loss. It is one of the older prophets puts it, "God is more precious than either silver or gold to us, and as a rich treasure, we can afford to be light-hearted, even when some other things slip away from us. The one sure treasure that never need slip away from us, is that peace of right relationship with God. In humble faith and trust we come to Thee, O God, who art the giver of all good, and the author and finisher of our faith. Amen."

ed conservatism in ACTION is the surest way to bring to the public the fullest measure of the benefits of government.

President Roosevelt's message indicates that he is familiar with this law and proposes to be guided by it.

OUTLINING his objectives and his purposes, the President says:

"It is not enough that the wheels TURN. They must carry us in the direction of a greater satisfaction in life for the average man."

WITH that objective, no one who is worth the slightest consideration can have any disagreement.

This country can't be permanently good for any of us unless it is good for all of us, and no one who is worth his salt will hesitate to join with the President in any reasonable program for bringing about greater satisfaction in life for the average man.
