BOYCOTT THREATENS SCHMELING'S BOUT. NEW YORK, Jan. 9.—(AP)—The scheduled Jimmy Braddock-Max Schmeling heavyweight championship fight, which has stumbled into more problems than a preliminary fighter, today was threatened with a sweeping boycott by the non-sectarian anti-Nazi league.

From the wild life division, headed by William L. Fishley, famed Oregon naturalist, and Ed F. Ayer, president of the Oregon Wild Life Council, came a vigorous protest against limitations of the sportsmen's activities and the destruction of creatures in the fields, forests and streams.

Advised of the proposed boycott, Joe Gould, manager of Champion Braddock, told reporters, "If a boycott is on, I will not let Braddock get into the same ring with Schmeling."

Mortimer B. Zerwick, public relations counsel for the league, contends that Schmeling will beat Braddock, and adds: "The championship will then be used by Hitler to bolster his theory of Aryan supremacy."

Mike Jacobs, who has Schmeling under contract, sent his attorney, Sol Strauss, to the office of the league to discuss the situation.

OREGON RESOURCES SUBJECT OF MEET

Wild Life, Timber and Land Discussed by Planning Board Members.

PORTLAND, Ore., Jan. 8.—(AP)—An noted speaker, explored Oregon's natural resources at the closing sessions of the first annual state planning conference today and discovered conflicting and overlapping interests removable only by a system over predetermined economies.

From the wild life division, headed by William L. Fishley, famed Oregon naturalist, and Ed F. Ayer, president of the Oregon Wild Life Council, came a vigorous protest against limitations of the sportsmen's activities and the destruction of creatures in the fields, forests and streams.

Averill warned the city of Grants Pass to look to its future in a choice between the mining industry and the protection of the Rogue river. He described the mining enterprises along the widely known stream as a transient occupation designed to kill off fish life if it was permitted to sluice mud and refuse into the river.

Finley, pointing out Oregon's problems must be made to harmonize with national efforts of wild life protection, criticized asserted short-sightedness in the construction of Bonneville dam.

Although he saw no chance for eliminating the conflict between the fishing industry and other river interests, Harlan B. Holmes, biologist for the United States army engineers, recommended planning projects to reduce the controversy. He admitted little progress has been made toward fish protection.

Timber Problems: C. J. Buck, U. S. regional forester and member of the state planning board, describing the wide conflict in the forests between watershed protection, timber cutting, grazing, highways, recreation and wild life, pointed to the need of ascertaining the main values of forest use and directing planning activities to the most important. Discussing firefighting problems, he said the forest service planned to use hydro-planes equipped to land on the high Cascade mountain lakes.

"It is a greater crime to sell rotten land than it is to sell rotten bonds—they put people in jail for selling rotten bonds," said Sinclair A. Wilson, chairman of the board's advisory committee on land use and classification. Wilson said conflicts on the land were unavoidable but could be reduced by planning "toward the common good."

Conflicts between the legal and moral rights in land and resources attention received attention from C. F. McDougall, engineer and chairman of the mining committee.

"The individual is only a guest on the land," he stated, "and he must not leave it unfit for future agents. The land really belongs to humanity."

"Land which cannot be used economically otherwise should be acquired for recreation purposes," said John B. Yeon, chairman of the advisory committee on recreation.

Pollution Discussed: R. E. Koon, chairman of the stream purification committee, said pollution in Oregon was practically confined to the densely populated sections of the Willamette valley with Portland the "hot spot." He recommended municipal action and legislation to remove the condition.

Walter H. Blucher, executive director of the American Society of Planning Officials, said at the conference's banquet last night: "I do not know if the people of Oregon appreciate what they have here. This is the last frontier. It is the only part of the United States which has resources which will support a larger population if properly used and controlled. It can very well be a 'land flowing with milk and honey' if you will use these resources properly."
