

OPponents of MILK CONTROL ASSAILED

"Selfish Interests" Paying For Propaganda, Smith Tells Dairymen.

CORVALLIS Ore., Jan. 20.—(AP)—Discussions of Oregon's milk control law gave way to business sessions at the Oregon Dairymen's association party today following a talk by Edgar W. Smith of Portland, the board chairman, who blamed agitation against control on "propaganda paid for by selfish interests."

Smith told the group income of producers had been augmented by $5,000,000 since inception of the control program nearly two years ago. He also pointed out that the board acts under legislative authority, and said retail prices are lower, quality considered, than at any time since 1918 with the exception of mid-depression.

In commenting on agitation in Portland against the board's action in boosting milk prices, Smith said even more drastic public control, possibly public ownership of the distribution system, would be brought into effect eventually if the present control act is repealed.

Codification of the state's agricultural laws, with changes where necessary, was advocated by Arden A. Reed, chief of the market enforcement division of the state department of agriculture, in order to make uniform enforcement possible.

Reed also said counties in which the services of a district attorney are not available for agricultural work should acquire other legal assistance.

Smith's talk on the milk control act followed a recommendation by George Fullenwider, Carlton, president of the dairymen's association, that the group go on record favoring the statute.

Smith, in predicting demoralization of the milk industry in event control laws in 15 states were running a gauntlet similar to the opposition which first greeted public utility regulation.

CORNSTALK ROADS IDEA OF CHEMIST

COLUMBIA, Mo., Jan. 21.—(AP)—Highways built from waste farm products are the goal of Dr. Hans Winterkorn, assistant professor of soils at the University of Missouri. Winterkorn discovered that furfural, a fluid obtained by distilling cornstalks, bran and other cereal hulls, has great potential value as a cement in the construction of semi-flexible roads.

Furfural was developed by scientists several years ago, but the soils specialist here is the first to investigate its possibilities as a paving material.

Used in Argentina When mixed with soil, Winterkorn says, the fluid forms a hard cake possessing a tensile strength of 200 pounds per square inch. Furfural-treated cubes have withstood 36-day water tests without noticeable disintegration.

The chief obstacle to development of the distillate for use as a highway base, the chemist says, is the present cost as compared with the lower priced industrial mixtures made from bituminous asphalt and tar.

"Where bituminous asphalt and tar products obtained from coal are relatively scarce and farm waste products abundant, furfural distilled from the latter may prove economically more advantageous," he explains. "Such a situation exists in Argentina."

The Argentine government is co-operating with the United States department of agriculture, the Missouri college of agriculture and the state highway department in sponsoring Dr. Winterkorn's experiments.

Three Methods

There are three ways to use the mixture in road building. It can be spread on the surface of a dirt road in much the same manner as oil at a cost of $250 a mile; mixed with soil loosened to a depth of six inches—at a cost of $500 a mile; or mixed with soil in a mixing machine and pressed into place with a roller.

The last method, Winterkorn says, would cost around $6,000 a mile, but would provide a durable base that should last 14 years or more. In each method a wearing surface of an eighth of an inch of asphalt or gravel is applied. Before coating to the United States in 1931, Winterkorn was associated in research work with leading German scientists.

ARE YOU A TANK PATTEN

You know me . . . I'm REDDY KILOWATT your Electrical Servant. I'm heating water for nearly everyone these days. Doing a good job of it too. I never let it get too hot or too cold. I watch it day and night keeping the temperature just right twenty-four hours a day. They call me the perfect servant. Every task around your home that you have ever asked me to do was done more quickly, more easily, more perfectly than it was ever done in any other way, and of course I can do just as well heating your water. You can install an automatic electric water heater on very easy monthly terms and Reddy Kilowatt your Electrical Servant will do the rest. You won't have to think about me at all for months . . . even years, and everyone knows my wage is so small it need scarcely be considered. Less than twelve cents a day for continuous hot water, at just the right temperature twenty-four hours a day, is all the average family pays me for this service.

Believe it or not there are still people who think the world is flat. There are also people who think heating water with a furnace or stove coil costs nothing extra. Actually a hot water coil robs the stove or furnace of at least 20% of its heat requiring that much more fuel than would otherwise be needed. It doesn't really pay to be a tank patten and worry about your hot water supply.
