The People Should Decide. BEFORE the people of the United States gave President Roosevelt an enormous vote there by expressing their satisfaction with his previous performance and their confidence in his ability to serve another four years, he did not tell them that he would immediately plan to secure a new supreme court.

Had he announced this intention which he must surely have had at the time, would he have been elected? That is a most important question.

The proposal advanced by the president, to a congress which is admittedly dominated by him, is so revolutionary in its implication and might, as years go on, so definitely affect the lives of all of us that it cannot be readily accepted as a matter for routine congressional action.

People must somehow be made to realize that this is the most important question that has arisen since the formation of our government under the constitution. They must be made to understand that the American form of government is based upon action by three separate branches—the administrative, the legislative and the judiciary. One branch enforces, the other makes and the third interprets the laws of the country.

It is, of course, possible to have a republic without a supreme court but such a republic would be one with a consolidated and autocratic government, a government in which the various states and the individual citizens would have no right or power save such as congress, in its absolute discretion might see fit to give them.

Charles H. Warren, a noted authority on the constitution states in a recently published book: "Americans can, of course, adopt such a form of government (republic without a supreme court) if they choose—but they should adopt it consciously and by express action; they should not change their present form unwittingly or by indirection; they should not destroy its fundamental features, without realizing that it is the foundation which they are de-

Daily Devotions. Many people try us, and life has its own way of bringing us care and worry, but there ought to be a way of meeting all these things, not as trials and tribulations to be distressed over, but as a part of the inevitable discipline and process in a world such as ours is. We can hardly imagine what life would be like without many of these things that trouble us at times, but it might not be the all-together good thing that we imagine it would be. If we would make them so, our trials and troubles are a great opportunity much more than they are anything else, let us make them stopping stones instead of stumbling blocks. Help us Heavenly Father, to see life more and more as opportunity and to strive, in the midst of all that it brings to us, to give a good account of our stewardship. Amen.

But we are right now face to face with such a change. If the people want it, well and good, but this change should not be made without giving the people a chance to decide. They did not make a decision regarding the supreme court when they voted for Mr. Roosevelt. He gave not the slightest indication that they, at that time, were deciding so grave a question.

BARBS. (Copyright, 1937, NEA Service, Inc.) A Colorado man has dislocated his jaw 21 times by yawning. That should teach him to ignore those European war scare items.

Nearest Neighbor: Joe Louis goes rounds and rounds, oh, oh, oh, oh... In certain states, it seems, it is a tactical error to ask, "Whose little dirt is it?" as she may scream for her husband.

A Jackson, Mich., boy swallowed a quantity of glass, but is suffering no ill effects except slight pains. Archeologists think Helen of Troy was a myth. That wooden horse yarn seems far-fetched, too, as carrouzels hadn't yet been invented.

OUT OUR WAY

Blind to Love

By HAZEL LIVINGSTON

CHAPTER XXXII. Nearly everyone was on the train now, and some of Dr. Crawford's friends already had bid her goodbye, and left, but many eyes continued to rove over the crowd.

"I'm afraid he's not going to make it," Ethelyn said tearfully. Mary jumped as if she had heard a shot.

"Well, here we are," Dr. Crawford said. "Here we are," Mary Shannon echoed. Her mind was a total blank. She saw the trees, and the dark, shimmering expanse of the lake. She saw the lights of the little boat-house at the end of the pier near where the car which had brought them from Victoria was parked.

"I'm so sorry I'm late—it was unavoidable." "How do you do Mr. Bennett?" "Oh, I didn't see you, Miss Pipper! Eyes only for our traveler. Excuse me, I'm so out of breath!"

"Had to get these things to you—a few chocolates, and a couple of books and magazines you might like, and—" he thrust a purple folder's box into her hands—"a corsage!"

"What? No mail for me? No messages? Has no one inquired?" Ethel Parkman Crawford! Surely my sister, Mrs. Todd—"Oh, I beg your pardon, madam! Mrs. Todd sent her car in to pick up two ladies. The chauffeur couldn't recollect the names, but said you would ask Mrs. Todd!"

RAMBLINGS OF THE NEWS-REVIEW MAN BY PAUL JENKINS

AS GREATLY as everyone in this day and age has come to depend on automobiles for transportation, we ought to give the county and state highway maintenance crews a good hand for the fine work they do unobtrusively.

ALL STARS DEFEAT RED HEADS, 45-44

A crowd, which set a record for attendance at a sports event at the Roseburg senior high school, went out to see the All Stars girls' basketball team.

The girls started a sustained rally in the final frame, however, and tied the score 41 to 41 with a minute to go.

The Red Heads played a very smooth game and exhibited a clever ball handling. The three-second rule in the keyhole was waived by both teams and the girls, in particular, used the pivot play most successfully.
