AMELIA SETS RECORD IN HONOLULU FLIGHT

Editorials On the Day's News

By FRANK JENKINS THIS headline means the eye: "School to Teach Waitresses How to Handle Customers Opens at Atlantic City."

AND while they're at it, here's hoping they teach the waitresses that serving a sharp knife with a steak is one of the sure ways to the customer's heart.

THE school idea seems to be going strong, at the moment, for another headline on the same day informs us:

"Police School Classes, Covering all Oregon, to Begin Next Week."

This writer has had comparatively few contacts with the police in an official capacity (and hopes to remain that way) but will not soon forget once hearing the siren behind and upon pulling out to the side and stopping being approached by a courteous traffic cop who said:

"I don't suppose you know it, but your tail light is out, and if I were you I'd stop at the next service station and have a new bulb put in."

IF HE'D said: "Hey, you, who do you think you are, driving at night without a tail light," we'd probably have put off getting one until the last possible moment, but as it was wild horses couldn't have dragged us away from the nearest service station (ill we got a new bulb, put it in the rear light and made sure it would burn.)

Human nature is funny, isn't it? ANOTHER headline: "28 Lost Lives in Fireworks Plant Blast at Manila."
