Behind the Scenes in Washington

WASHINGTON, June 8.—The fight for control between Roosevelt and congressional opponents reached the point where the president speaks privately of a "purge" of anti-New Dealers from the democratic party and where his chief opponents in the senate hope to humiliate him as Woodrow Wilson in the league of nations fight.

The closer you get to the white house the more you get the impression that the supreme court plan is far from being a dead duck and that Roosevelt will press it as the issue on which he will stake the light for domination of his party and congressional legislation. His bitter opponents will come such news and many of his friends do not. Majority opinion in Washington holds that the court plan is licked.

In essence the prime issue comes close to being a question of whether the people elected members of congress to do or to waste their own judgment. An increasing number of members have begun to chant: "Are we nice or are we men?" Ever since election Roosevelt has felt that his huge majority was a personal victory for him and his principles as expressed in the Madison Square garden speech, that the people who elected democratic senators and representatives expected them to vote for his measures, that the people continued to stand with him and that as long as he was their voice and instrument, individual senators could not stand against him.

Facing now what is mainly a conservative effort to reduce his power, Roosevelt tells friends the court fight is a good one in that it separates sheep from goats, that the democratic party would be better off without some of the senators who oppose him and that he is ready to campaign against some of those senators in the primaries next year.

At this writing the president and his aides plan to force the issue by getting a vote on the court plan in both house and senate before the present session ends. They may change their minds, but they've been arguing whether to bring out on the house floor the original bill or a measure modified so as to give the president five concurrent court appointments instead of six. The court's final three decisions favoring power companies as against the New Deal were a signal for renewed administration propaganda against the conservative justices. Many old-timers believe Roosevelt has gone too far in his attack after launching the court bill without consulting any one in congress has been conspicuous in a program of tactical blunders. It's too early to tell.

RAMBLINGS OF THE NEWS-REVIEW MAN BY PAUL JENKINS

COLONEL ROBERT A. MILLER, B. H. Beckman and A. F. Maegley, all residents of Portland, were in this office a day or so ago, en route to Jacksonville, their former home. Each has been a member of the Masonic lodge there for fifty years, and were to be presented with the buttons which honor this record.

Mr. Beckman is the son of Cornelius C. Beckman, early day Wells Fargo agent in Jacksonville, and banker. The latter was one of southern Oregon's best known citizens, and many early day grocery stores stoves they still are told of him, for that matter. Mr. Beckman told me that, from the time his father first began buying gold for Wells Fargo, and later for his own bank, through the most prolific mining days of the Jackson-ville country, over 25 million dollars had passed over his counters. He estimates that 120 millions have been recovered from the mountains and streams of southern Oregon since the discovery of gold there, over eighty years ago.

annoying a large section of congress. The soundly defeated men who want the president defeated because they are aspiring to succeed him, others who don't like the court plan and believe a vote for it is politically dangerous, some who harbor personal grudges as a result of white house snubs, and others who are jealous of Roosevelt's prestige as contrasted with their own lack of power. With these men Roosevelt's attitude that most of congress rode in on his coat-tails is not popular at all. They see F. D. R. as a would-be dictator over the democratic party and his future as a man can think of no reason why they should cooperate.

And on the sidelines are many who compare Roosevelt's aggressiveness with that shown by Wilson when he returned from Europe. Rebellion in the house can be somewhat discounted as a possibility because the staid, lumbering amendments to the relief bill. Causes of the trouble still remain, however.

Even House Resentful... Many representatives feel they have been treated more or less like peons by the administration. Few have any contact with the president. Most of them complain that patronage in their districts has been given to senators. The occasional congressman who gets sore and barges into the white house is likely to meet up with a 15-minute presidential filibuster at the end of which Secretary Meloyre comes in and says time's up.

Big city congressmen wanted public works money and many southern members had received promises of school houses and other small buildings from PWA. So when lobbyists for the contractors, the steel, lumber and building materials interests and the building trades unions came along, the house was ripe to rebel and rampage. Leaders would have had a harder time getting it back under control again if mayors hadn't wired angrily to members and persuaded business men to do likewise by assuring them that cuts in PWA funds meant boosts in local property taxes. It's much too early to say that Roosevelt hasn't a problem in the house as well as in the senate. Copyright 1937, NEA Service, Inc.

BARBS

Facts that Washington's new interior building has 28,100 pieces of china in its cafeteria brings danger of a new furor over the Yellow Peril. Land crabs often steal lost golf balls in Australia, whereas over here the tiny wee looser the ball usually turns out to be the crab. Duelling disqualifies political candidates in seven states, but after election the winners nearly always are at swords' points anyway. A dentist in Toronto said future mail will have only 12 teeth, which means that when we get angry we'll still have little to show for it. As a practical use of the new atom smasher, it is suggested for the fellow who steps on your foot, then claims he has a hantion, too. (Copyright, 1937, NEA Service, Inc.)

Daily Devotions

DR. CHARLES A. EDWARDS... The resources of the man who is walking in God's way and seeking above all things to do God's Will are great and helpful beyond all reckoning. St. Paul knew that God would supply all his needs according to the riches in Christ Jesus' own Lord, God's servant and follower has divine power and helpfulness that will make triumphant inevitable if only he will accept and use his resources as it is intended that he should. Even darkness and the shadow of death is not to be feared, but to be used. Help us, O God, to claim in great humility and yet in mighty faith that the crown of life which thou hast promised to him who overcomes. May we find Thee near us this day and may our lives grow strong as we put our trust in Thee, Amen.
