The Declaration
 ON JULY 4, 1776, the Continental congress adopted a Declaration of Independence from the government of England. On the morning of July 8 the Declaration was published in the Pennsylvania Evening Post and the people of the United Colonies rejoiced. They felt the tyranny of the English king was ended. And in truth it was ended but not before many bitter years of fighting.

For more than a century and a half this country has celebrated the adoption of the Declaration. "When in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of Nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind declares that they should declare the causes which impel them to separation." Thus the first paragraph of this historic document sets forth its purpose.

The English king, declared the colonies, was ruling them as a dictator. They had many grievances. "The history of the present king of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute tyranny over these states. To prove this, let facts be submitted to a candid world." Thus the Declaration introduces a long list of complaints.

Most of these were eliminated by the formation of our existing constitutional government. In fact our constitution was specifically designed to prohibit forever certain practices, as for instance the quartering of soldiers on the people, and numerous others.

In these days the fundamental problems of the people were pretty much the same as they are now. Here are some complaints voiced by the irate colonies which will bear considering today. They are quoted directly from the Declaration:

"He has obstructed the administration of justice, by refusing his assent to laws for establishing judicial powers."
 "He has made Judges dependent upon his will alone, for the tenure of their offices, and the amount of their salaries."
 "He has erected a multitude of new offices, and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people and eat out their substance."
 "He has combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitution and unacknowledged by our laws, giving assent to their pretended acts of legislation."
 "He has excited domestic insurrections amongst us..."

GATHERINGS such as this do a lot of good. In reality, the interests of town and country are mutual. Each needs the other. Goodness known, the towns couldn't live without the country, and if the truth were told the country would miss the towns if some calamity should wipe them out.

as possible it will be better for all concerned.
 But it certainly does no harm to get together from time to time in an atmosphere of good will and general well being, and it's pretty sure to do a lot of good.
 If there were more gatherings like this, Oregon would be a better state.

SOME WORKERS GO BACK TO WPA JOBS

Seasonal employment is not providing as many jobs as anticipated and it is still necessary to provide labor for some relief clients, C. D. Fies, WPA engineer for Douglas county, said today. Many of the WPA workers who took odd jobs have been unable to secure steady employment for the season and have been returned to WPA rolls.
 The airport project, which is being continued by WPA labor, will probably operate all summer with a limited crew, Mr. Fies reports. The WPA is furnishing work to a number of men who are of an age or physical condition which prevents them from competing in ordinary channels of labor, and will require continued aid, he reports.
 Reports that WPA laborers receive 50 cents per hour for their work are erroneous, Mr. Fies states. The rate of payment for the Roseburg area is 40 cents an hour, he advises.

OUT OUR WAY

CO-ED WIFE
 By EUGENIA MACKIERNAN

CAST OF CHARACTERS
 CORAL CRANDALL, heroine and senior at Elton college.
 DAVID ARMSTRONG, Elton chemistry professor and Coral's husband.
 DONNA ALLEN, Coral's sorority roommate.
 HOYT MARQUIS, Coral's onetime fiance.

Yesterday David and Coral cleared of suspicion when Donna confessed that Hoyt stole the process.
CHAPTER XIII
 The commencement exercises were almost over. Coral, sitting on the platform with the rest of the graduating class, was beginning to feel warm in the folds of her academic gown. Her mortar board, set at a jaunty angle at her black curls, seemed light. The voice of Dean Matthews, whose talk followed that of President Norton, droned on and on in the heat of the late June morning. She looked down into the auditorium where her parents were sitting, but her searching eyes could not locate them. She glanced toward the opposite corner of the platform where David was seated in company with the rest of the faculty. She caught his eye and smiled in answer to his quick wave.

Her thoughts began to wander. How different this commencement day was to what she had anticipated a few weeks before! She had been afraid then that she might never even graduate, for even after her innocence and David's had been established in connection with the theft of the process, there had been a faculty committee to face on the subject of her marriage. Dean Matthews, the librarian, and some of the older professors had wanted to drop her from school in spite of everything, but the words of Professor Maxwell and Professor Bendorf had finally swayed their judgment. She had been given a great deal of advice; some good, kind, and well meant, some acid and disappointing. But in the end, everyone had been amazingly generous and understanding.

Then, too, the last of Hoyt's threats had been hanging over her. For many days, even after his father had been notified of his son's part in the theft of the process, she had not known whether or not he would refuse to give her father an extension of time on his loan. Coral shuddered a little at the recollection of those days, when with her graduation, day growing nearer and nearer, she saw in its approach only financial catastrophe for her beloved father. But even that had come out all right, she thought happily.

Mr. Marquis had given her father an unlimited extension of time on his loan. He had even made a special trip to the university to see President Norton and attempt to make up in some way for his son's conduct. He had called on Coral, too, and told her with a smug air that he regretted his part in accepting Hoyt's threat of foreclosure.

"If I had known," he had said, "that you were not really in love with Hoyt I should never have permitted him to threaten you in such a way. But I was honestly convinced, Coral, until I heard of your marriage that you were only flirting with him, intended to marry him, but wanted to tease him a little. I knew the boy was unhappy about it, so I tried to help him a bit. I see now how wrong I was." He had asked her forgiveness, then, and though Coral had laughed and made light of her former fears, she knew deep in her heart that nothing could ever completely wipe out their seat.

She was recalled from her reverie, then, by the realization that Dean Matthews had stopped speaking and that President Norton stood once again on the rostrum. She listened attentively for his words. At last they came, deep and sonorous, booming out over the respectfully quiet audience. "Each year, through a special endowment, the faculty of Elton university has the pleasure and honor of presenting a prize changed farewells all around, then left after admonishing David and Coral not to leave without seeing him again.

 Just then President Norton approached them. "Coral, I want you and David and your parents to come to my house for lunch." "After they had accepted, he went on. "Mr. and Mrs. Grandall, won't you come on ahead with me? It's very warm here, and I can guarantee the coolness of my front porch. I'm sure Coral and David are as eager to get out of those hot caps and gowns as I am, so they can change and come over later."
 Her parents and President Norton walked off together, and Coral and David strolled off toward the other side of the campus. "Are you happy, darling?" David asked tenderly.
 She looked up at him, her eyes shining. "Yes, David, I am happy. There's just one thing lacking. I wish Donna were here. I sometimes think they were too severe, asking her to leave without receiving her degree."
 David smiled, and pulled a yellow oblong from his pocket. "You're the most unselfish child alive. I think this is from Donna. You may give it to me before we marry you, thinking she might miss you. A messenger brought it to the sorority house just after you left."
 Coral tore open the telegram. "David, listen to this! 'Wish could be with you but sailing at noon for South America with Dad. Good luck and congratulations to you both. Donna.' David!" Coral's face was alight with excitement. "Hoyt's father is sending him to South America to start over again, too. Do you suppose...?"
 "You're an incredible matchmaker, my darling, but who can tell. Let's hope they each find as much happiness as we have."
 Coral caught his hand. "I hope they do! Oh, darling, doesn't everything seem perfect? An all-summer honeymoon to California for us, then back here next fall. Why, my days at Elton aren't really over. They're just beginning aren't they?"
 "That's how it seems, sweetheart. Are you glad?" David slipped his arm around her. "Thank you'll like living in that little house next to Professor Maxwell's... and being the wife of a struggling young chemistry prof?"
 Coral kissed him. "I'll love it. I'll simply adore it. I love you, David. She chuckled. "And I think I'll make a pretty good wife, if I do say so."
 David forgot onlookers and caught her in his arms. "You're that now... my cooed wife." And then, as his lips met hers, "The most wonderful wife in the world."
 (THE END)

Daily Devotions

DR. CHARLES A. EDWARDS
 The effort to take Jesus literally sometimes ends in not taking him very seriously. For example: "Swear not at all." To turn these words into a prohibition against a legal oath is quite to miss the point that Jesus wished to make in using them. What He is urging is, the straightforward honesty and integrity of soul that need no protestations or guarantees or assurances. We have all seen that and we know how good it is and how much better it would be for the world if there was a great deal more of it. We ought to decide that we shall do our best to add our share to the sum total. For all the shifts and futilities and inconsistencies of our lives we ask Thy pardon and Thy grace, Our Heavenly Father. Give us a greater love for the true and the honorable and the just thing and may our lives bear witness that we have tried to love Thee. Amen.
