Rheumatic Fever and St. Vitus' Dance
St. Vitus' Dance
St. Vitus' dance or cheren is a form of rheumatic fever. It occurs when rheumatic fever it occurs when rheumatic fever and the probably due to an infectious agent, may finantiest itself in a variety of forms. Thus, when involving the joints, it gives rise to what is known as relyaritritis, or artirlits of many joints. When it attacks the brain it gives rise to chorea, when it affects the is and underlying tissue, rheumatic nodules result. If it involves the heart, it causes rheumatic heart disease.

Rheumate fever usually shows itself in youth as muscle or joint pains, chorea or St. Vitus' dance, subcutaneous (under the skin) nodules or polyarthritis. The sufferer's heart is often involved during or following these manifestations, but the heart damage may not become evident until months or years later.

St. Vitus' dance predominantly occurs in girls. Nervous and excitable children seems to be especially predisposed to this form of racimatic fever. It is most common believeen the ages of 5 and 1s. Contributing causes to development of the disease appear to be fright, anxiety, injury, or excusive mental activity.

In the early stages the child appears to be resiless and irritable, it is unable to focus its attention upon its tasks for any length of time, and it shows other behavior changes. At the same time or a little later the child becomes unable to coordinate properly in its movements.

At first only the upper extremities may be involved. The young sear will be seen soing through inserts will be seen soing thr able to coordinate properly in its movements.

At first only the upper extremities may be involved. The young-ster will be seen going through involuntary, irregular and jerky movements. It seems to have become very clumy— It may drop distinct or a proper of water. Uncoordinated movements of the face may cause peculiar grimnes. As the condition progresses other groups of muscles become involved, including those of the lower extremities.

These symptoms may vary in severity, in the extrem form the sufferer may be incapable of waining or stressing and may even find it impossible to feed herself. Speech may become disturbed. Constitutionally the St. Vitus dance victim may show such symptoms as loss of appetite, loss in weight and some degree of
