A Good Move... BUILT about 25 years ago, the Rose school building has been the subject of considerable speculation as to its fitness and safety.

The school board has taken an obviously intelligent step in asking that a qualified and totally disinterested person inspect the building and give a complete and detailed report.

It is not seriously questioned, of course, that a new building in place of the present Rose school building is desirable. But taxpayers, generally feeling the pinch of rising prices and increasing federal taxes, are not likely to be of a mind to vote a bond issue for a new school building or for two new school buildings if there is no more urgency than mere desirability.

Competent local builders who have looked the building over have questioned its actual safety. If it is true that the structure is not in sound condition and is a hazard, there is no further question—it must be razed and a new building erected.

Soon, therefore, we shall have a complete inspection and a report. Upon the basis of this report it can easily be determined whether or not action should be taken.

It would be a good plan also to inspect the Fullerton school building. That wooden structure is old and, before any further bond issue is proposed, the true condition of the Fullerton building and its rating as a possible fire hazard should be considered too.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—(AP)—Frank T. Bell, fisheries commissioner, expressed the hope today that congress when it meets in special session next month will find time to complete action on the Vinson-Barkley anti-stream pollution bill.

The measure, passed by both the senate and the house last session, struck a snag in a conference committee. It provides for grants and loans to states, municipalities and corporations seeking to clean up polluted streams.

Hell described the bill as a boon to the fishing industry. He said it provides a way to restore fish life to many streams. The Pacific northwest, Bell said, has streams badly in need of purification, not so much because of sewage pollution but because of poisonous discharges from smelters, mines and pulp mills.

Yesterday, Bob and Kathleen met for the first time, strike up a pleasant, romantic attraction for each other. But the picture is already obtaining complications. The Duchess has her eyes on Bob, too.

"I should say not," agreed Bob with rather more emphasis than was necessary. "I'm on my own, instead of going into my dad's business. Seaton of a good family turning to a life of crime and all that, you know. My mother didn't teach me to commit robbery and kill guys, but I'm paid to do it."

"Well, from now on, you'll know that Kathleen and I are upstairs. When you get tired making rhymes, just say the word and we'll come running."

"Don't blame him," Bob stretched his arms. "I'm still sitting pushing my stuff into place."

But when he finally said good night to Kathleen and was opening his own door the Duchess herself came out of her studio, accompanied by Professor Bracey. She glided right over to Bob with both hands outstretched.

He picked the little animal up in his arms. "The peach's still strange here," he explained. "We haven't seen anyone yet but Miss O'Shan, we—"
