Midas Touch Brings Glitter to Mode

LITTLE SOMETHING GOLD IS VALUABLE NUGGET OF FASHION NEWS FOR WOMEN TO REMEMBER

By MARIAN YOUNG
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

NEW YORK—Beside the massive array of bracelets and necklaces with which fashionables festoon themselves these days, a single bracelet, worn demurely on one wrist, seems wistfully insignificant. It's a year to look as though King Midas touched your throat and arms.

Gold is the darling of the hour. From wide, chunky necklaces to slim, delicate ones, to be worn in groups of three or four, or even five or six, there's a great variety from which to pick and choose. If, down deep in an old jewel case, there are several brooches and chains that grandmother left, polish them up. Or hunt the antique shops. Old-looking jewelry is smarter than bright shiny new pieces.

Find an enormous old pin set with garnets, star sapphires or opals, then have a clip attachment put on the back of it. Earrings, almost of yellow gold and larger than formerly, sparkle on the ears of elegantes.

Jewelled flowers are everywhere. On a plum or blackberry vine colored gown, what could be more striking than a rhinestone and amethyst orchid? Or a rhinestone gardenia with green enamel leaves on the shoulder of a black velvet dance dress?

If you have odds and ends of jewelry that seem pretty unimportant, take them to a jeweler who will cooperate with you in working out some way to make use of the metal and whatever stones there are.

The jewelry shown here today doesn't cost a small fortune, but it is chic, correct and perfect with background dresses—those simple, beautifully cut frocks which shout for the right accessories, then set the wearer as well as the accessories off to excellent advantage.

The web-like necklace might be an heirloom—so dignified and simple is it. The matching bracelets would be lovely with a long-sleeved dinner dress as well as a black street frock.

The new winter costumes call for a heavily jeweled season—with "gobs" of jewelry the keynote of the smartest costumes. Necklaces worn three or four at a time, bracelets in profusion. Earrings, clips, brooches—no restraint anywhere. (From Monet, New York)

Gold and glitter flashed all over the Paris Openings... and now gold jewelry becomes the fashion of the hour, lending glamour to the simple black dresses found in every smart woman's wardrobe. This interesting web-like necklace has bracelets to match.

FAVORITE RECIPES

Cracker-Oyster Dressing
Combine, stirring only until blended:
1 cups Snow Flake cracker crumbs
1/2 cup melted butter or savory fat such as bacon, sausage or chicken
1 teaspoon salt
2 cups (1 pint) oyster with tough muscles removed
1 1/2 teaspoons lemon juice
1 1/2 tablespoons minced parsley
Moisten with oyster liquor. Stuff lightly into bowl. This is enough for a 5 or 6 lb. fowl. It will take 12 cups for a 19-lb. turkey. Half bread crumbs may be used.

If you want scalloped oysters that are fluffly throughout, with a crisp brown crust, and a fragrance that reminds you of the cracker supports, and the gorgeous repeats of your childhood, do try this recipe. It's based on tradition, but made easy and delicious by the use of Snow Flake crackers.

Scalloped Oysters, 1937
Put in a thin layer in the bottom of a shallow, buttered baking dish crumbled Snow Flake crackers, cover with oysters, sprinkle with salt and pepper. Dot with butter. Then another layer of cracker crumbs and of oysters. Top off with more crumbs, butter, salt and pepper. Pour over a moderate quantity of oyster liquor, mixed with cream or rich milk (half and half) if desired. Bake 30 minutes in a hot oven (450°). Serve at once. It will take about 2 cups of crumbled Snow Flake crackers to 1 pint of oysters. Never make more than two layers.

The brown leaves lay thick on the ground. And the brown hills stood in silence around.
The brown leaves lay. The brown hills stood. One close to the other. As close as they could.
The hills and the leaves thrived brown together. And changed their coats To fit the weather.
The leaves are blowing And covering the hill. Rolling and tumbling Then lying so still.
The hills and the leaves All colored the same. Brown hills, brown leaves As brown as their name.
See the brown leaves. As they lie by the fence. See them pile high Where the hills commence.
See them scatter out Where the hills slope high. See them turn brown. As they wither and die.
Brown hills, brown leaves They never die They just turn brown With a good reason why.
From off the slope Way down to the road, The summer time hills Are shedding their load.
Brown leaves drifting Wherever they will. Down in the hollows Way back of the hill.
What is it we see On the hills as we pass? Brown leaves drifting As brown as the grass.
The hills turned brown The leaves did the same. So we found a brown word And gave them a name.
The hills turned brown The leaves piled high. Tie a sad little word But we say, goodbye.
