U. S. V. HOSPITAL

By Facility Earn.

Jiggs tells Maggie that Professor Trobe moved out of the apartment house when he learned she was moving in, but our tenants go out when no new ones come in, so the hospital cannot be accused of taking in bad company. Not one admission is on our record this week, but three men have been discharged to their homes. Lewis Carr, Amos Cacy and Thomas Bearden.

Monday's picture, "Frenzied and Sam," was entertaining even to grownups who could not claim that it recited memories of their own childhood. Billy Mauch seems a type of an unimpaired boy.

The short subject, "Cradle of Civilization," recalled the saying that history runs in cycles. The narrator pointed out that the old castles were built as fortresses as well as mansions, and now New York architects are planning how to strengthen apartment house roofs for defense against bombardment and to level them for airplane landings.

Wild geese apparently were apprised of the storm which devastated the Nome shore early this week, and the whole northern colony started southward at once. Even Roseburg's soundest sleepers were aware when they reached this point of their temporary after a night's rest on East Moreland lake and the Portland golf course.

Homer Seeverly and William Lohmiller have been enjoying visits from their wives this week, and what a lot of home town news they have heard!

Ray Roberts has been moved by the example of a fellow patient, plus his wife's urging, to busy himself making armchair mats and sofa cushion covers. It is a fairly easy way to spend time while waiting for a home fracture to be healed.

"Captains Courageous," that old picture, showed some rough seas. Even Spencer Tracy's hair had a permanent wave. What a valuable employee in a neurologist's hospital! Lamented Harrymore could be! He has such a chain way of separating inconsequential trifles from serious affairs, whatever the character he plays.

The only period of sunshine on Wednesday day was during the parade. Every patient who could sit up was in it, thanks to the Legionnaires and the local automobile dealers. We who could not participate were remembered by the American Legion auxiliary with red, white and blue napkins and white on our dinner trays.

When a baby Kargero plays hockey, does its mother think she has had her pocket picked?

WHAT TO WEAR WHEN YOUR ESCORT SAYS: "WE WON'T DRESS" You Almost Need Formal Introduction to Glamorous Though Casual Clothes

Gold mesh thread hand knit under Mandarin lines gives a sumptuous appearance to the lovely dinner blouse, designed particularly to set off a slender waistline. Not the narrow, plain collar and the buttons down the front. The blouse is worn with a black skirt and veiled hat.

(From Kargero, New York.)

By MARIAN YOUNG
NEA Service Staff Correspondent
NEW YORK.—When he says, "No, we won't dress," means it, that's your cue to get into a street-length frock, as formal as a dress which doesn't cover your legs possibly can be.

With it, you wear a hat with a flowing veil, dressy shoes, bag, gloves. Thereupon, the formal effect of the informal ensemble completely obliterates the self-pity you felt when you first realized that you weren't going to have a chance to wear the new evening dress, or even a dinner gown.

Needless to say, individual differences in taste and color for afternoon teas, restaurant dining and other informal occasions are of metallic fabrics—shimmering, glittering—some dull-surfaced, others bright, almost gaudy, but in a nice kind of way.

The majority are short-sleeved. High necklines, finished with up-standing collars or neat, flat "little girl" ones vie with very low necklines. As important as the metallic materials are sumptuous, velvets, beautiful crepes in black and rich jewel tones.

When he says, "Dinner and something in the way of entertainment later—I'm wearing a black tie," you greet him in a dinner dress (sleeves, please), and a dinner hat or one of the rather flirty new headresses. In this category, dinner suits with ankle-length skirts, trim jackets and elegant Gold metallic cloth is the luxurious material from which the dressy afternoon or party frock was fashioned. The lines are simple so as not to detract from the fabric. A corded belt and bow at waistline and neck are the only trimming. The black velvet halo hat is a touch of rich contrast.

blouses are highlighted. One especially attractive dinner costume, seen in a swank night club recently, included a floor-length, square-necked shirtwaister of silvery blue metal cloth with jeweled buttons down the front, a narrow slit down the back of the bodice.

For very formal dinners, balls, receptions and the like, he'll wear tails and you'll wear a decidedly evening gown, of course. In other words, every well-planned wardrobe includes three distinct types of formal clothes.

Evening Dress with Jacket Practical
For one who operates on a budget, an evening dress with its own jacket is a practical investment. The dress is for formal parties and balls, the dress plus the jacket for dinners and the theater. By buying a black gown and jacket, then wisely picking a variety of accessories, this one outfit and a formal afternoon costume will see her through an entire social season.

It's a year to strive for subtle, grown-up effects. You might wear gay gloves (perhaps shocking pink ones) to match the flower in your headpiece. But you wouldn't think of matching your bag to those of adding a shocking pink chiffon scarf. One touch of bright color, two at the most, is the rule. Nothing obvious is tolerated. It's best to concentrate on fabric and line and one original note—not on accessories which seem professionally (too studiously) assembled.
