LA GUARDIA HAS EYE ON HIGHER POLITICAL JOB

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—(AP)—Mayor Fiorello H. La Guardia's apparent national political ambitions—perhaps the presidency—floated aloft today on an unmistakable trial balloon, trailing this slogan: "Balance the population!"

The language about as clear as the diplomatic language of pre-war politics ever is clear, the mayor projected himself last night into a far bigger theatre of operations than the chief magistracy of New York.

Before a completely urban audience La Guardia—who in the Nov. 2 city election became a local history-maker as the first man ever to beat Tammany and allied democratic organizations—has twice in a row—put farm relief as the biggest American necessity.

He spoke at the anniversary dinner of Survey Associates, a research and publishing organization, in an address that scarcely touched at all on New York City and dwelt at length on national policy.
