U. S. V. HOSPITAL

Day by day we are adding to our census, and it is gratifying to the personnel to hear new arrivals say, "Oh, this is a fine place." "I'm going to like it here." "Wasn't that a good dinner we had today?" Roseburg can not supply a lake like that which edges the hospital grounds in the state of Washington, but we have a river, and eighty other stations have not even that much water.

The newcomers are either Oregon sons, or were in Oregon when their health broke down. Thirty give Portland as their home address. Medford, Salem, Grants Pass, Ashland, Pendleton and many smaller towns are represented.

The sound quality of our picture shows is better now that we have larger audiences. Monday night we saw "Easy Living." The plot was as fast as a rattling express on a life on another planet, but the whiff of action was lively entertainment.

Technical critics say that Don Ameche has the finest voice which is heard on the air these days. Whom would you nominate for top?

Two patients were admitted to the infirmary ward this week, Claude Ray and William V. Mahoney. Both are homes in Portland, though Mr. Mahoney was born and brought up in Minot, N. Dak.

What will Shirley Temple be when she grows up? Probably just a comfortable home body, for she has had a life-time's glamour in her juvenile years. The pictures in which she starred brought in more box office money than any others in the movie world for 1937.

Harvey Dietzman, better known by the nickname, "Radio," has returned from a visit to his mother in Portland. A little mothering seems to have improved his appearance.

The story is going around of a man who said his insanity was so bad that the sheep were striking for shorter hours. What about a transfusion of snipers' blood as a cure? They put in long hours.

John L. Hall was transferred on Tuesday to the Veterans administration facility at Los Angeles, and Joseph L. Shew went home the same day.

Some one once wrote, "A toast to you, who knows us well, yet loves us." Patients from the American Lake hospital feel much the same way about the personnel who knew them there and were willing to be transferred here with them.

Old timers have had an idea that the nurses here of the original set-up were just about as fine as the Veterans Administration has, but the new ones coming in look very sweet. We would like to say to them:

"Grow old along with me, The best is yet to be."

HERE'S THE HAIR IN THE BEAUTY OINTMENT— DISSATISFIED WITH YOUR LOOKS? VERY LIKELY COIFFURE'S WRONG

By ALICIA HART
NEA Service Staff Writer.
Smart hairdressers can accomplish nothing short of miracles. Not only do they arrange hair in such a way as to make the hair itself appear lovelier, but they can, and do, fix it to emphasize good features and make bad ones quite inconspicuous.

If you have a long face and rather heavy jaw (the great percentage of American women come in this category), a nose which seems much, much too long for you, a turned-up nose that is annoying instead of cute once you are just twenty-five, or a generous supply of mature lines around eyes and between your nose and corners of the mouth, a new coiffure is the answer. If you are open-minded enough to realize your defects and to be perfectly willing to try a new hair-do, then find a coiffure expert who will try this and that until he hits on something truly becoming.

Before and After Studies

Regardless of what you have been told, first think about the matter, the fact remains that soft curls and fluffiness about the face only serve to emphasize the same times rather hard lines of maturity. To prove this, Don Ross (Mr. Ross is a designer and illustrator of coiffures—not a hairdresser) sketches, from a photograph, the head of a middle-aged woman, compares it with the coiffure designed to flatter her.

With hair cut quite short, so that the thickness of her neck is emphasized, and finished with narrow, mono-toe-distinct, horizontal waves and a flock of fluffy ringlets near the face, every line she has stands out. However, with waver, more definite, vertical waves, not a sign of a ringlet and a thick roll low at the back, the lines become less definite than the wavered, barely show at all.

If the bridge of your nose is wide and your mouth large, stay away from a center part, for Ross advises. Center parts are for handsome women with slender bridges, he thinks.

One whose face is very long needs hair low on the neck, especially low behind the ears. Notice how Greta Garbo's long bob balances her large mouth and heavy jawline. Also, the long-faced woman needs flatness on top, and, of course, the least hair where the face is smallest.

Rule for Coiffing

The last rule always applies—put the most hair where you have the most face.

Always three of head and face as two parts which make the finished picture—never separately. Furthermore, you must learn to adapt each new mode to your own head and face. Few people can afford to have their clothes designed especially to suit their figures, but almost everyone can afford at least one trip to a hairdresser. And it's money well spent.

Next: Clothes you can wear.

The grayed woman, left, looks frizzy mainly because her face is surrounded by fluffiness. Horizontal waves make her head seem broad and the short bob emphasizes the thickness of her neck. Don Ross, coiffure illustrator, suggests the coiffure at right—hair low on the neck, with definite lines to contrast with the lines of the face, thereby softening them. Vertical waves appear to lengthen the head.
