POET'S CORNER

TRANQUILLO

(The following poem appeared in a recent issue of Pirate's Gold, Homestead, Florida.)
Her lips were sealed to bitter words;
Her thoughts were sweet and kind.
And only one who dwelt in peace
Might understand her mind.

She never let her passions flame,
Or argued for the silly
Of mental combat. Burely one
Could not improve on this.

She was a very paragon,
Apart from hate and strife;
But after all, I must confess,
She led a stupid life.
—Marjorie Hunt Pettit.
