POET'S CORNER

PALS O' MINE

W. TAYLOR COOPER
Quietly eluding the year away
On the old home farm, three friends I knew,
I see them trooping by, one by one,
Gyp, Nig and Billy pass in review.
Three little four-footed pals o' mine, Trying so hard just to understand What best their master liked them to do,
And carrying on at his command.

Many rambles together we had,
O'er fields and meadows and wooded hills,
Is it a wonder then that it all
A cherished page of memory fills?

Times there are when I hear as of old,
Across the years that have fled away, Their joyous bark, as a call to come
And share their sports of the summer day.

Why waste your thoughts on dumb friends, you ask, God made them only servants of man.
Yet that delusion I like to hold,
That somewhere they'll be living again.

I picture their home of rolling hills, Prairies, forests and flowering glades, League upon league, away and
away,
Till lost where the far horizon fades.

All studded and gemmed with sparkling lakes;
Threaded with streams of silvery hue;
And over all, white gossamer clouds Drifting along in a sea of blue.

Out there in that land that's built of dreams,
And peopled by pals that we have known,
I think of Gyp and Billy and Nig, Ever and happily faring on.
