POET'S CORNER

THAT MAKE MEN

By G. M. LEPPER

It isn't those thoughts
That smooth the day,
It isn't those words
With flattery gay.

It isn't those deeds
That bring the sunrise,
And scatter the clouds
From out our skies.

It isn't those things
That are easy to do,
That bring out the best
That's hidden in you.

It isn't the evening
Filled with delight,
That brings a smile
To some dark night.

It isn't the pleasant day
Hilarious undaunted delight,
It isn't just pleasure
That pillows our head
For the night.

It isn't the easy path
Cleared of the stumbling rock,
That gives us the desired hours
As they circle around on the clock.

It isn't the laughter
And the gay retreat,
That builds the highways
For untrained feet.

And the nice easy paths,
Made smooth for our wading,
Lead only to pitfalls
Where now we are hastening.

Nor it isn't the highways
Made smooth for our wading,
Nor the morsels of food
Made sweet for our tasting.

No it isn't that,
It's vanishing-erasing
And just the way we meet
Each trouble we're facing.

Ah no, it's enduring the pain
Like a broken tree—
That make men
Of fools like me.
