POET'S CORNER

TRANSITION

By ALDEN HARNESSE
Though boundless seems the wilds which far away
Beneath the moonless skies extend,
The inner voices that I hear, convey
That soon these wastes for me will end.
Mine eyes beyond the darkness now can see
A world of radiating light
Whose rays illumine and reveal to me
The path that leads me out of night.
As I proceed no longer I believe
Deceptions of this arid land,
As gleams of intuition I receive
This dark domain I understand.
The phantom-nature and the seeming way
And dream-actuality of fear
That would retard me, I unveil till they
As mere delusions disappear.
The desert's edge I reach, where higher Mind
Unfolds to me Perfection's sphere.
No definite sense can know the world I find
In realms of Soul-existence here.
As on I press where Truth, the only Cause,
Confers a power I ever feel,
By all-transforming Love's immortal laws
My thoughts emerge into the Real.
I gain the regions Morning glories,
Where brightest beauty crowns the sod,
And enter valleys that externalize
The peace and harmony of God.
