"Have you been waited on, Madam?"

What'll He Do for Cinders?

For 25 years George L. Weiss of Long Beach, Calif., rode the Pullmans as a traveling salesman. Then he retired—only to find that he couldn't sleep in an ordinary bed. So what did he do but build the complete sleeping car section shown above, right in his own home. Weiss is pictured making up the upper berth preparatory to catching some sleep in the manner to which he has become accustomed.

How's Your Osculation?

If the newly-invented kiss-o-meter is as accurate as it's cracked up to be, the above is osculatory perfection. P. N. Vandekieft, a student, and Dorothy White, radio actress, are shown sending the indicator as high as it will go on the device built at Armour Institute of Technology in Chicago to appraise amorous activity. Experimenters—strictly in the interest of science, of course—grasp brass electrodes in one hand and then go into their act, registering "timid," "synthetic," "passive"—or better. If young Vandekieft and Miss White were at a carnival they would win cigars or something, because they "rang the bell."
