THIS CURIOUS WORLD

By William Ferguson

WHALES BEFORE TAKING IN A FRESH SUPPLY OF AIR, PREPARATORY TO DIVING, MUST EXPEL ALL THE USED AIR IN THEIR LUNGS. THIS WARM AIR, STRIKING THE COLD ATMOSPHERE, CONDENSES INTO A VAPOR, CAUSING THE PHENOMENON KNOWN AS "SPOUTING."

THERE IS little water content in the "spout" of a whale. If the animal blows before reaching the surface, a small amount of water will be thrown up by the air force, but most of the body of the fountain-like spray is vapor.
