The Motorloggers Take to the Ferries for a Visit to Canada's Most Western Metropolis

This newspaper is co-operating with The Oregonian and the Oregon State Motor association in presenting a series of motorloggers designed to stimulate travel in Oregon and the Pacific Northwest. The following article has been condensed from a full-page article appearing in The Oregonian June 12.

By Arden K. Pangborn

THE ferry for the San Juan Islands and Sidney, B. C., leaves Anacortes, Wash. (theoretically, at least), at 8:45 A. M. Therefore, it was with a collective sigh of relief that we of The Oregonian-Oregon State Motor association cruise party drove our white Ford V-8 sedan onto the docks of the Black Ball line at 8:44:50. Ten seconds to spare!

We hastened across to the company's office in search of tickets, a little fearful that we still might not have time. The tickets were there. We hastened back, thankful that the line of cars had not moved forward. Then we waited. Ten minutes, 15, 20, 30.

Ahead of us in the line was a gaudily decorated blue sedan. It was Ivan Beecroft, special representative of the very active and successful Victoria and Island publicity bureau, of which George L. Warren is commissioner. Mr. Beecroft seemed unfurled by the slightly erratic schedule.

"There's a new ferry on the run today," he explained. "The Rosario is being supplanted by the Crosline. We'll be leaving pretty soon now."

His prediction was finally justified 45 minutes after the scheduled departure time, and the Crosline nosed its broad bow into the green water toward the islands.

With the car safely stowed away on the lower deck and with breakfast from the shipboard lunch counter safely stowed away inside us, we settled back to scan our schedules and enjoy the scenery. The ferry was due in Sidney at 1:15 P. M. Allowing for the 45 minutes late start, it should arrive at 2 P. M. We should be in Victoria, a short motor drive from the port of embarkation, not later than 3. That would be fine, in spite of our limited time and in spite of the many things we planned to crowd into that time.

Portly Ferry Jams

The matter thus disposed of, we turned full attention to the amazing beauty of the first of the islands looming ahead. We recalled what someone had once said of this famous group: "Em-eralds set in a sapphire sea."

There are 172 islands in the group, unique in charm and variety, and they form an all-year vacation paradise. San Juan and Orcas are the two largest, and each contains several communities and many tourist resorts. The picturesque and sheltered waters of the sound are excellent for yachting and cruising and the sandy beaches excellent for bathing.

Shortly before we approached the Friday Harbor ferry slip, Mr. Beecroft brought us the encouraging news that the captain felt we might have a little trouble docking. Something about dolphins, or the width of the ferry, or something.

A "little trouble" was a most euphemistic term for what happened. The ferry was too wide, or perhaps the dolphins by which it was to be guided into the slip were too close together. In any event, the ferry nosed between them and stopped ten feet short of its mark. The captain saw further attempt to approach was useless, so he tried to retreat. But retreat was impossible. The ferry was stuck.

While the population of Friday Harbor declared a holiday to watch this excitement and to offer advice from the docks, the Crosline churned mud and the captain no doubt fumed in his pilot house. After an hour or so, the coast guard came to the rescue, and hooking on to the stern, pulled our stubborn craft back into deep water.

It was 3:30 P. M. when the Crosline edged away from the wharf at last and turned its bow toward Sidney. We realized suddenly then that our schedule had been knocked into a cocked hat.

"We'll have no time at all in Victoria," someone lamented.

But Vinton Hall, the Oregon State Motor association's cruise party skipper, came to the rescue. "We'll have to stay over a pin to the outgoing honored queen, Miss Adah Marie Ruhl. Miss Ott presented a lovely bouquet to Miss Ruhl.

The new council was installed with Mrs. Cora Young, past junior grand guardian of Job's Daughters of Oregon, presiding. The installing officers were: Guide, Nellie Motschenbacher; associate guide, G. N. Riddle; marshal, Frances Ellison; chaplain, Mrs. G. N. Riddle; pianist, Mrs. Lois Ann Stewart; and recorder, Miss Elizabeth Williams.

The new council includes: Mrs. R. L. Whipple, guardian; A. B. Taylor, associate guardian; Mrs. E. A. Britton, guardian treasurer; Mrs. H. C. Darby, guardian secretary; Mrs. A. B. Cacy, promoter of hospitality; Mrs. George Brunner, guardian of apparel; Mrs. Paul Jenkins, guardian of social activities; Mrs. Calkins, promoter of finance; Vera McClintock Jones, guardian of music.

Any Job's Daughter member who has reached the age of twenty or has married before reaching that age is entitled to receive the majority degree of membership. Adah Marie Ruhl presided during the majority degree ceremony and degrees were presented to Mildred Gardner, Ethola Kinney, Gay Busar, Helen Wetherell, Betty Dixon, Eugenia Virden and Marjorie Johnson.

This was the last regular meeting of Job's Daughters until school natural gardens, is the gateway to the orient and other world ports and its import, export and other commercial indices are impressive, in spite of its leisurely atmosphere.

Then, besides its own distinctive beauty, Victoria is fortunately situated as the starting point of trips to the innumerable other holiday playgrounds of the island. We were reminded of this when we called at the offices of the Victoria and Island publicity bureau the morning after our arrival.

"It's too bad you couldn't have made the ferry trip from Vancouver to Nanaimo, too," genial Commissioner Warren said. "It's a beautiful drive down the island."

We agreed heartily. It was too bad. "Next time," we promised.

Scenic Sites Viewed

With Mr. Beecroft as our guide—and a very capable one, too—we set off shortly before 1 o'clock, pausing only twice—once for the amazing view of the city from Mount Talmie and once at the Inglenook gardens.

The Mill Bay ferry crosses Saanich inlet to deposit the traveler upon the edge of Malahat drive, the beautiful winding roadway leading some 20-odd miles or so back along the inlet and Finlayson arm to Victoria.

From Malahat, there is an ever-changing panorama of thrilling scenic views. We paused for tea at the Lookout, where the eye sweeps for many miles, north, west and south. Off to our right, the glowing, snow-capped tip of Mount Baker loomed above the haze in the distance. We drove back to the hotel feeling that Malahat was a fitting climax to our brief sojourn in British Columbia.

We did not realize that the real climax was ahead after we had boarded our ferry for Port Angeles (it leaves Victoria at 9:15 A. M. and on time, too) the following morning. The day was gloriously fine, the sun warm and bright, and as the ferry poked its nose into the strait of Juan de Fuca, the magnificent Olympic mountains reared their brilliant snow-tipped heads into the sunlight before us. The unpeakable grandeur of the sight was one never to be forgotten by any voyager, no matter how sophisticated his travel tastes. Yes, certainly, this was a fitting climax to our journey to Victoria and the island.

Victoria is much smaller than its mainland sister, Vancouver. (Population 39,075 if you insist on being exact.) It is located on the southern tip of Vancouver island and largely open to the sea. It is the capital of the province of British Columbia and its sight-seeing attractions are its majestic parliament buildings, its dominion government astrophysical observatory on the top of Little Saanich mountain, its parks and gardens, its Crystal Garden pool and its shops for china and antiques.

Primarily residential and conservative, Victoria is still an active city. Its beautiful inner harbor, a landlocked basin surrounded by stately buildings and opens in the fall, with the exception of picnics and informal summer dancing parties.

P. N. G. CLUB MEETS AT TAYLOR HOME ON FRIDAY EVENING

The P. N. G. club met Friday evening at the H. A. Taylor home with Mrs. Evelyn Hoover, Mrs. Alvin Wetherell, Mrs. Louise Young and Mrs. Taylor as hostesses. The business meeting was in charge of the president, Mrs. Myrtle Spauld. Beautiful bouquets of spring flowers were used about the room.

Two guests, Elsie Reese and Miss Pearl Bailey of Chicago, were present. Members present were Margaret Ashcraft, Ethel Bailey, Ethel Hunsbaker, Luella Clingempeel, Clara Cawfield, Esmeralda Hoover, Gertrude Hatfield, Evelyn Hoover, Susie Jackson, Tillie Johnson, Edythe Florence Kelley, Edna Laubach, Mayme Pickens, May Patrick, Lydia Roadman, Ruth Reese, Belle Stephenson, Myrtle Spauld, Emma Taylor, Alvin Wetherell, Ona Williams and Louise Young.

Ethel Bailey, Belle Stephenson and Ona Williams had charge of the games. Prizes were awarded to the winners. The club prize was won by Tillie Johnson. Delicious refreshments were served at the close of the social hour at beautifully appointed small tables.

The July 1 meeting hostess committee includes Susie Jackson, Tillie Johnson, Esther Harpham and Effie Schwarz. The entertainment committee includes Ethel Hunsbaker, Gertrude Hatfield and Alice Goff.

At a very delightful potluck picnic supper was held Friday evening, June 3, in McLaughlin's grove in honor of Robert L. McLaughlin's eightieth birthday anniversary.

Long tables were beautifully decorated with bouquets of sweet peas and tall yellow tapers. The centerpiece was a lovely three-tiered birthday cake, which was decorated in yellow and orchid with 80 yellow lighted candles. The cake was served by Mr. McLaughlin.

Fine gifts were presented to Mr. McLaughlin in honor of the occasion, one of which was a radio, a gift from his daughters and sons-in-law. Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Kester, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Smith and Maxine Arnold. Numerous bouquets of flowers and cards were presented from friends.

Horseshoe, baseball, ring tennis and visiting were enjoyed. Those enjoying the occasion honoring Mr. McLaughlin included Mrs. Ella Lough, his sister, Mrs. U. F. McLaughlin, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Hatfield, Mrs. W. A. Pearce, Mr. and Mrs. James Pinkerton, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Hatfield, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Choman, Mrs. Edna Sponaugie, Mr. and Mrs. James Kester, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Hendrickson and son Harry, Mr. and Mrs. Ross Lovelace, Mr. and Mrs. George Bonebrake, Mrs. E.
