

Sunday at the Churches

Daily Devotions

By DR. CHAS. A. EDWARDS

Worship and intercession always go together. Before we dare to intercede for others we must seek to know God's mind concerning them. Our danger is to injure their souls by false sympathy, or by self-interest. "Change them, Lord, that we may have more comfort." As we become utterly identified with God He will show us how to open the sinner's eyes to see the truth about Himself, and God can make him a new creature in Christ Jesus our Lord. O Thou who dost call us to be ambassadors of Thy good will to men, May Thy peace abide in our hearts. Deliver us from all selfishness and self-pity, and may we be so at one with Thee that Thou canst use us to bring others under the healing shadow of Thy wings, for Jesus' sake we ask it. Amen.

UMPQUA RECEIVES SPORTS PUBLICITY

Articles on Chinook and Steelhead Featured in Publications.

The Umpqua river is receiving a great deal of publicity this month in national publications, devoted to sports and outdoor life. The publicity is principally the result of work done by Harold B. Say, director of travel and information with the Oregon state highway department.

The current issue of National Sportsman contains a picture of Frank Mygatt of San Francisco, Pacific coast representative of Hearst magazines, landing a steelhead on the Umpqua river, together with a story dealing with fishing in Oregon and other western states.

The July issue of Hunting and Fishing contains a story written by Mr. Say "Steelhead and Derbies," featuring Mr. Mygatt and Raymond "Red" Pearson, guide at Winchester. It deals with winter steelhead and chinook salmon fishing.

The current issue of Outdoor Life carries a main illustration, under the heading "Angling," a monthly feature by Ray Bergman, showing a photograph of an Umpqua river steelhead.

Mr. Say is an enthusiastic booster for the Umpqua river as well as for other sports streams of Oregon, and is in a position to give expert information to interested persons through first hand knowledge as he is a frequent and successful fisherman on the Umpqua.

"I sincerely believe that if Umpqua fishing can be stepped up a few more notches, which I know can be accomplished, we will have something that will bring fishermen from the far corners for steelhead and salmon," Mr. Say declared recently. "If runs can be built up in the summer time and each year in the spring to equal that of one of a year ago in March, we will have fishermen coming from a long ways off."

U. S. SENATE RAPS CIVILIAN BOMBINGS

WASHINGTON, June 16.—(AP)—The senate condemned today the bombing of civilian populations.

A resolution by Chairman Pittman (D. Nev.) of the foreign relations committee expressing "unqualified condemnation of the inhuman bombing of civilian populations" was adopted on a voice vote after brief debate.

The measure directs the foreign relations committee to study the subject and recommend steps that congress might take to end the practice.

Senator Clark (D. Mo.) declared that if the neutrality law had been enforced some of the recent bombings of civilian populations might have been obviated.

Instead of an "empty resolution," Clark said, the senate "ought to take steps to see that the machinery for bombing is not exported from this country."

Mr. McClain in Town—Curtis McCall of Garden Valley, was here attending to business yesterday.

ELK THRIVING IN THEIR LAST STAND

By "DING" DARLING

The magnificent American elk once ranged pretty well all over that part of the continent now occupied by the United States. The early settlers quickly exterminated it in its original range east of the Mississippi, and toward the close of the nineteenth century it was being rapidly driven to its last stand in the western states. The elk isn't very hard to hunt. Its hide was a commercially valuable leather commodity, its head makes an attractive trophy and at one time there was a heavy traffic in elk's teeth and many a noble specimen was killed merely for its teeth.

The slaughter of elk in wholesale quantities was easy when the snow was deep because they stuck in compact herds, a habit that exposed the buffalo to virtual extermination. There were elk in New England in the early days, and they survived in Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania until the settlers wiped them out.

Winter Feed Big Problem

In the present range of the elk winter feed is the great problem. The protected valley lands have been appropriated for domestic herds which monopolize the old natural winter feeding grounds of the elk. Here and there, notably in the Jackson Hole country, the nucleus of the Yellowstone elk herd is cared for through the winter months by artificial feeding and pasturage on the elk refuge maintained by the U. S. biological survey and the state of Wyoming in cooperation.

These provisions plus those of the national park service will insure the elk against extinction but they are entirely inadequate to increase the existing population.

Once Numbered Millions

The elk is one of the outstanding victims of civilization. A hundred million is what the natural ists figure the elk population to have been in this country when the white man began to take charge.

In view of the fact that the state of Wyoming estimates the economic return from every elk taken in this season by the sportsmen as approximately $100 and that a head of beef, the elk's chief rival for existence, is lucky to bring half that amount, it might be good business to raise more elk and less beef in some quarters.

Out of an estimated $4,000,000, 000 to be spent by motorists this summer, approximately $75,000, 000 will be paid to the tax collector.
