CANDY-COUPON SALE DECLARED ILLEGAL

SALEM, June 17.—(AP)—Attorney General L. H. Van Winkle held yesterday that merchants who sell candy, accompanied by coupons entitling the buyer to draw for cash prizes, are violating lottery laws.

Van Winkle said the candy in question was distributed by the Web-foot Distributing company, with headquarters in Roseburg and Eugene.

In the days of the Roman empire purple dye was so expensive that the emperor and the imperial family were practically the only users of it, hence the phrase "born to the purple."

CANVASBACK TOP IN DUCK NOBILITY

By "DING" DARLING

Another king! Of the deep water ducks, the divers that love wide bays rather than marshes, the canvasback is without doubt the sovereign. Its characteristic flight, conspicuous markings of deep red head and neck, black collar and gleaming white back and belly together with its stocky build make it easily identifiable. It vies with the mallard in weight and size.

Since the time of George Washington and earlier the canvasback has been regarded as the choicest wild water fowl in the world for the table. In market-shooting days they have sold for as much as $6.00 a pair, wholesale; $1.20 a pound undressed and before the days of bag limits reached a low of ten cents apiece by the wagon load.

The favorite food of the canvasback is eel grass, wild celery and succulent herbs which grow at the bottom of shallow lakes. It is a strict vegetarian and limits its flight lanes to regions where its restricted diet can be accommodated.

Blight Destroys Feed
Vast beds of eel grass on the Atlantic coast have been wiped out in recent years by a mysterious fungus blight, pollution and other causes. In the prairie states and provinces the breeding grounds of the canvasback have disappeared as drought and drainage dried up their former homes.

The invasion of American waters by the German carp, an exotic "soft fish" which feeds on bottom vegetation and in time destroys the food supply upon which the canvasback ducks once thrived during their continental migrations, has unquestionably been one of the most severe enemies of the canvasbacks and red heads.

Protection Forced
These calamities of nature and artificial origin have so reduced the canvasback population that in order to insure its existence as a species the biological survey found it necessary to place it on the protected list until its numbers can be restored. Increased numbers on the winter roosting and feed grounds during the winters of 1935-36-37-38 have shown the wisdom and practicability of this restrictive management.
