MORATORIUM ON MINING RETAINED

In view of the passage by the house of a bill continuing the mining moratorium for another year, after the senate had earlier passed a similar bill, leaving only the senate's approval of a minor amendment, it is assumed that congress has definitely continued the mining moratorium for another year, the state department of geology and mineral industries reports. The year ends July 1, 1938.

Because of inquiries received at the office of the state department, the following statement relative to mining claim assessment work has been issued: 1. Mining claims are not cancelled by the government for failure to do assessment work but are subject to re-location by citizens or those who have declared their intention of becoming citizens.

2. Doing the assessment work is the essential thing in order to hold a claim. Filing a proof of labor is prima facie evidence only which throws the burden of proof upon the contestant that the work was not done.

3. If a claim owner starts work before noon of July 1st and proceeds with reasonable diligence (say 5 days' work per week) to complete the assessment work for the year ending on that date, he preserves his rights.

The moratorium does not alter the laws other than to relieve the claim owner from final assessment work provided he files a declaration of desire to hold the federal income taxpayer, and provided that his declaration applies to not more than 6 claims for an individual and not more than 12 claims for a corporation, partnership or association. Corporations, paying an income tax, are ineligible to exemption.

The federal government does not become actively interested in claim matters until an owner starts to patent his claim. The moratorium on assessment work, as we understand it, has no effect on the basic federal law pertaining to mining claims nor to state laws other than relieving the owner, under the conditions stated, of their assessment work for the year in question.
