ALL-STATE LIBRARY SERVICE STILL AIM

Travelling System Taking in Every County Goal of Oregon Plan.

SALEM, June 24.—(AP)—Oregon's 95-year-old dream of a library service that would provide the state's entire population with books may be realized in the near future if State Librarian Harriet Long is able to establish her traveling libraries. Governor Martin is betting on her to get her traveling libraries, asserting "she is the kind of a woman who wets what she goes after." He credited her with getting the $1,000,000 library-office building to replace the cramped library quarters in the supreme court building. The new structure, the cornerstone of which was laid Tuesday, will be completed next January.

About 250,000 of Oregon's 1,000,000 population have no library service except through the state library's mail order department. Miss Long, admitting this to be inadequate, wants to establish traveling libraries which will carry books on trucks into every hamlet. This service is now carried on in nine of the 36 counties (Multnomah, Umatilla, Wasco, Hood River, Malheur, Deschutes, Klamath, Jackson and Josephine). The movement for state-wide library service began on July 5, 1913, when citizens of Oregon territory voted at a public meeting to buy law books for the property of this community. Five years later congress appropriated $5,000 for a library to be maintained at Salem.

In December, 1855, the territorial capitol burned, destroying all the books except those in circulation. The next year the territorial legislature asked Congress for $20,000 for a new library, but only $500 was granted. Until 1905 the library was mainly a law library, but that year the Oregon library commission was created. In 1912 the law library division was separated to become the supreme court library, and the state library was established to maintain general service. Today the state library owns 385,408 volumes, which are circulated by mail and to smaller libraries.

Fechner said the corps would enroll 67,470 "juniors" between the ages of 17 and 23, inclusive; 5,317 war veterans and 6,820 project assistants. The enrollment of juniors and veterans by states included: Idaho, 370 and 10; Oregon, 745 and 50; Washington, 1,250 and 75.
