CITY TAX LEVY OFF FOR SECOND YEAR

LOGANSPORT, Ind., Aug. 9.—(AP)—For the second straight season, Logansport will not have a city tax levy next year.

What's more, every policeman and fireman will get a five-dollar per month wage boost.

Councilmen decided last night a $500,000 annual profit from the city's electric light plant would be enough to pay the expenses and take care of wage increases.

POET'S CORNER

I HAVE A FRIEND

By MALINDA ODERKIRK

My friend's garden over there,
Just across the picket fence,
Is a witchery of bloom
With its odors—sweet incense.
Buttercups of deepest gold
Hide forget-me-nots of blue.
Poppies blushing rosy red
Wave near phlox of darker hue.

Ivy climbing over stones
Scorns the clover scented grass.
Lilies there, with daffodils
Bow and wave as soft winds pass.
On my heart its magic weaves;
And the moonlight over all
Sifting downward through the trees
Brings strange peace, while night birds call.

In my garden naught but weeds
Ever grow. Thorn trees, quite all,
Bent and swayed obeisance, near
Cockle burrs, close by the wall.
Now and then a tumble weed
Rolled along as if in glee,
And a bramble grew beside
Bunch grass and a wild plum tree.

In the quiet shades of night
This friend came, stole through my gate
Bearing flowers—bright and gay.
Humming softly, working late.
He twined a morning glory here,
Tucked a little daisy there.
Placed some lilacs near, to waft
Their sweet perfume on the air.

Crowned the cockle burrs with ferns,
Stuck a rose on every thorn,
Scattered columbines and left.
Yes, they wilted with the morn;
But not till the lesson made
Its impression on my heart.
In my garden now there grow
Roses rivaling all art.

SHELTER BELT IDEA GROWING IN U. S.

Government Will Set Out More Trees in Spite of Opponent's Jeers.

WASHINGTON.—For four years the hooters—including many congressmen—have been trying to kill that shelterbelt idea in the western plains country.

But there stand the shelterbelts—84,000,000 trees—swaying serenely in the prairie winds. Trees have been placed on 13,000 farms, in strips 115 feet wide. The total length of these strips is 7,000 miles—in a north-south zone 100 miles wide.

And now the government has announced it plans to plant trees this year in 6,000 more miles of strips.

Trees—But No Forest

You don't hear so much hooting these days—perhaps because the government isn't going in for so much publicity. Most of the jeers came from people who thought there was going to be a solid, 100-mile-wide forest stretching from Canada to Texas. Because of that misconception, the forest service had to do a lot of explaining.

It explained that shelterbelts are really short strips of trees and shrubs usually planted 10 rows wide. From a quarter to three-quarters of a mile long, they run along the side of a farm from which the most damaging winds blow. The purpose is to deflect the wind so it won't blow the soil away, to lessen extremes of temperature, and to save moisture.

The fact is, the forest service pointed out, that prairie farmers for generations have been doing haphazard shelterbelting on their own.

Farmers Must Help

Now the forest service supplies the trees from its own or leased nurseries. The government, using relief labor, plants the trees. The farmers and the communities in the shelterbelt zone supply the land and cultivate the trees.

On a typical 160-acre farm, there will be about 8,000 trees, occupying about 10⅓ acres. Trees have been planted in North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas.
