On August 9, a treight car which had been partly loaded with school simplies by executives at the Woolworth warehouse, was smalled to a public warehouse. These union warehousemen refused to mload it claiming it was "hot because it had been loaded at a struck olar."

The "hot car" began moving from warehouse to warehouse. As each crew of employes refused to infoad the car, the warehouse at which It was stopped was closed. By August 29, 121 warehouses had closed, including public grocery. Houre, drug and dry goods establishments. The buying public was not hard-pressed for necessities during the extended impasse, but many retail grocery stores ran out of several items, and said the warehouse dis-pote was responsible.
