POET'S CORNER

The following poem was published in The Oregonian, Portland, Oregon:

THE MISER

She saved her minutes, one by one,
Until she had a day.
She added sprigs of lavender
In scented disarray.
She saved her days religiously
To meet the future's toll;
The misers' moments served, in part,
To cheer her frugal soul.
But when she came to count her wealth,
She found that time had flown;
And of her treasures there remained
Sweet lavender alone.

—Marjorie Hunt Pettit.

Daily Devotions DR. CHARLES A. EDWARDS

Maybe you have heard good people complain, have you not? That life brought them so little of real joy and happiness and satisfaction. Perhaps you have felt in that mood yourself at times. But it may be that at such times you ought to ask yourself this question: If my life had been better fundamentally and comprehensively better would it not have stood a chance of being very much happier and satisfactory? Happiness and satisfaction do not come to us for the mere wishing. If they came at all, and in so far as they come, they are the fruit of honest and earnest and unselfish right-living. What we do not sow, we cannot hope to reap. For ill-used opportunities and failure to do and to be what was possible for us, we crave Thy grace and Thy pardon. Our God do Thou help us to put more into life that we may take more out of it, both for others and for ourselves, Amen.
