POET'S CORNER

LIFE WITH A THOUGHT By G. M. Leeper If it wasn't for the thought That clings to the dead, We would find life empty Of so much we need. For it's often a thought That claims the night, When from the heart Life takes its flight. Then as we sit alone Our thoughts parade, And on our empty path They cast their shade. A thought at twilight Brings back the day, That we could have No other way. The dead was not there But to; "the thought" When it had spoken We may forget.
