SEAS LASH SOUTH CALIFORNIA SHORE

Damage Estimates Run Up to $100,000; Barricades Now Shield Beach.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 7.—(AP)—Sandbag barricades spotted the shore of the Pacific from San Diego to Santa Barbara today, as beach residents feared additional losses from a combination of high tides and tremendous swells stirred up by a storm at sea. Estimates of damage in various communities ran as high as $100,000, with several houses reported washed away, dozens of others flooded and damaged, interurban street car tracks washed out, piers battered and debris piled high on the sand.

In Hornos Beach, salt water covered ocean front blocks and fish swam in a street a block away from the ocean. Tides approaching seven feet, but slightly lower than those of the past two days, were due today. Ten blocks of the strand was under water. Long Beach reported extensive damage to beach houses, with a possible loss of $50,000. Pacific Electric railway tracks were washed out between Huntington and Sunset beaches, and streets of Newport beach were under water in places.

In San Diego county, several houses in the Mission and Ocean beach districts were washed away and many others had been evacuated. Houses south of Santa Barbara likewise were damaged. Near Santa Monica, a wind intensified the heavy swells and damage was confined to debris strewn along the beach. Fifteen passengers aboard the liner Lurline, which put in at Los Angeles harbor on route from San Francisco to Honolulu, were injured when 50-foot waves battered the ship, tilting it at one time at a 28-degree angle.
