

DEFENSE PROGRAM SHAPED FOR HOUSE

President Roosevelt. Mr. Roosevelt has called "a deliberate lie" any statement he told the committee...

Several committee members, contending Mr. Roosevelt had given his version of the meeting, have suggested he release them from their pledge of secrecy.

Nye said today he saw little chance Mr. Roosevelt would do that. But, he added, demands for information by other senators might make it incumbent on those who attended the conference to report on it.

Senator Johnson (R., Calif.), said he thought in view of the president's statements the committee should "have a perfect right to speak."

Several senators said privately they would demand an account of the white house meeting from the committee members. It was learned at least three committee members wrote down all they could remember of Mr. Roosevelt's remarks immediately after the conference and put the material away for future reference.

McNary Opposes Demand. Although Nye and Senator Bridge (R., N. H.) have insisted committee members should be permitted to give their version of the white house meeting, it was apparent republicans would not act as a unit to back up this demand.

It was learned Senator McNary of Oregon, the republican leader, had been urged to call a party caucus to consider the foreign policy problem, but had decided not to do so.

Senator Capper (R., Kans.) said while there had been conflicting reports as to what occurred in the white house meeting, he felt the president's statement last week should be regarded as final.

for congressional action, this can be brought about "only by my reporting to the congress on the situation at this time."

The president said $256,000,000 would be needed to employ 2,000,000 at the prevailing average monthly cost of $1, leaving $259,000,000 for April, May and June, or at average of only $126,000,000 per month—enough to employ slightly fewer than 2,000,000.

The president said it had been necessary during the first week of February to utilize all working capital and payroll reserves normally maintained to protect the funds of the United States against over-obligation, and it would also be necessary immediately to "re-establish these reserves from the supplemental appropriation."

through service connection fees. Authority for such a bond issue was given by the voters. This program, after many months, finally reached the point where bids were received, the lowest proposal being more than $200,000 above estimates, and considerably more than the city had available.

Three years ago the project was submitted to the Works Progress Administration and an agreement reached whereby the city promised to furnish all materials and engineering, and the WPA to provide the labor.

purchase of materials for the disposal plant

The city council has prepared all ordinances and other necessary legal steps to enable immediate sale of the bonds, if authorized to do so by the voters. The operation is being conducted under an enabling act which expires March 1, and the council is gearing its actions to complete the sale and delivery of the bonds by that deadline.

The city already has expended in the neighborhood of $20,000 in the building of pipe and other incidentals connected with the intercepting line. This money was raised by licenses on pinball machines, transfers from the emergency fund and from other budget departments, proceeds from sale of city owned lands and anticipation of delinquent tax payments, the latter action having been granted by the circuit court. $50,000 extra tax has been levied for the improvement.

Practically all of the major work on the intercepting sewer line has been finished. There remains a tunnel to be constructed in the south part of town, the installation to be completed in West Roseburg, and a few short connecting links to be built. The most difficult part of the job, that of constructing a siphon across the South Umpqua river, was completed last fall.

$105,000 More Needed

To finish the sewer line and to meet the disposal plant is expected to cost about $105,000. The WPA has approved the city's application, contingent upon the outcome of Thursday's election, and has agreed to furnish labor amounting to $69,710, and will aid in the purchase of materials with a cash grant of $11,980, making a total of government cooperation of $81,720.
