DAILY DEVOTIONS BY CHARLES A. EDWARDS

"I know whom I have believed," H. Tim. 1:12. There are a host of people in the world today who look for a certitude they do not have and who would give a great deal to be certain and sure about many things that vitally pertain to the soul. There was no uncertain sound in the voice of the one who wrote the words we have just read. The reason is not far to seek. Paul had an experience on his way to Damascus. He never once doubted it. The world might say, "Paul, you are mistaken; it was only a hallucination. You are mistaken, but his answer would be: Oh no, I am sure. I have seen with those eyes of faith, a voice has spoken within me. 'I know whom I have believed.' Someone recently said of a man how he knew he had been converted. 'I was there when it happened,' was the convincing reply. It is not upon some external authority, but upon an internal experience of God through Christ, that we are to depend for that full assurance that brings comfort and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit, Amen.

Reshuffling Plan Revives Forestry, Park Bureau Feud

By BRUCE CATTON News-Review Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, May 4.—One of the oldest rows in Washington is coming to a head again as a result of the reorganization talk. Having grouped land, welfare, and construction activities in new, unified agencies, President Roosevelt is now reported to be considering a similar reorganizing of conservation bureaus; and the thing that is causing the row is the suggestion that the forest service may be taken out of the department of agriculture and placed in the interior department—along, it is hinted, with the department of commerce's bureau of fisheries.

Involved in the row are not merely the usual bureaucratic elements which can be counted on to raise a howl whenever the established order is tampered with, but also some highly important business interests which fear that the transfer would work to their disadvantage.

Rivalry is Heated A year ago the same transfer was in the wind. At that time the forest service people objected strenuously to the change; even more strenuously, however, were the objections from the lumber and grazing people of the west. All that was actually proposed at that time was the changing of the name of the interior department to the department of conservation; but it was taken for granted that if this happened it would be followed by transfer of the forest service, and although the name-changing bill passed the senate, it was allowed to die in the house.

Complicating the proposition is the fact that some of the sharpest rivalry in the national parks, which have heretofore been administered by the forest service, has been between the forest service and the national park service of the interior department.

As the names imply, forest service has charge of the national forests and park service has charge of the national parks. Practically all of the national parks are now surrounded entirely by national forests or are bordered by them. Each outfit has its own forest rangers, its own foresters, its own fire-fighters—and its own set of rules and regulations.

Lumber companies may not touch the trees in the national parks. In the national forests, however, lumbering is permitted, under careful regulation. Commercial grazing is not permitted in national parks but is (under regulation) in the forests. Water power in the national parks is not available to exploitation but is in the forests.

The business interests which have heretofore used these resources in the national forests fear that if the transfer is made, the same sort of rules which now govern the national parks will eventually govern the national forests; that no lumbering or grazing will be allowed and that the water resources will be withdrawn from public use. Naturally enough, they are pretty strongly opposed to the change.

Would Be Ickey Victory Nor does the forest service like the idea. The rivalry between the two organizations is something like that which infects the enlisted personnel of the navy and the marine corps. It extends all the way to the rangers and fire-fighters out in the field. Consequently it is inevitable that a certain amount of pressure is put on congress to prevent it.

If the transfer does go through, Secretary Harold Ickey will have given a long way toward making the interior department a department of conservation—whether the name is actually changed or not.

Ickey's theory is that the department ought to be primarily a department for the physical administration and husbanding of the nation's physical resources. If the idea of conservation is to be developed, he feels, there ought to be one government official accountable for any failure of conservation anywhere could immediately be placed on one person.

The reorganization steps already taken have helped him indirectly, but they have helped off a couple of non-conservation activities from his department. The office of education has been lifted out and given to the new federal security agency, and the responsibility for managing and jantoring public buildings has been handed to the federal works agency. If he gets the forest service, he will practically have his long dreamed-of department of conservation.

But before he gets it there is likely to be a protracted row. One cause factor is that the forest service was originally a part of the interior department. It was transferred to agriculture under President Taft, and has remained there ever since.

PARDON FOR OREGON SLAYER ADVISED

SALEM, May 12.—(AP)—The outgoing and incoming state parole boards recommended to Governor Sistrup today that he give a conditional pardon to Clarence Johnson, who was received at the state penitentiary 20 years ago after he murdered Mrs. Eunice Freeman in Portland by hitting her on the head with a gas pipe. He was sentenced to life imprisonment.

Johnson has been a trustee for 15 years and works in the prison administration building. He gave valuable assistance in quelling two prison riots.

He originally was sentenced to 25 months in the San Quentin, Calif. prison for assault with intent to rob. Mrs. Freeman helped obtain a parole for him and he then moved to Portland to live at her home. There he killed her.

Since the murder constitutes a violation of his California parole, he would be returned to San Quentin to serve the rest of the 25 months.

MARKET REPORTS

WOOL BOSTON, May 12.—(AP)—The Commercial Bulletin will say tomorrow: "The heavier buying movement which developed last week has been projected into the present week and it is estimated that fully 20 million pounds of wool have been moved in these two weeks. At the present week-end, the movement seems to be subsiding somewhat, with prices now fully up to import parity and mill buyers a bit inclined to back away from offerings. Class III and IV (fine) territory wools are quotable at Boston at 65 to 67 cents, clean basis."
