

2ND HAND DEALERS UNDER EUGENE REIN

EUGENE, May 24.—(AP)—The city council has passed an ordinance designed to regulate and control Eugene second hand dealers and pawn brokers.

The ordinance requires that second hand dealers and pawn brokers must obtain a five dollar license every six months, that dealers must keep a record of all purchases of second hand goods to be turned over to city police daily, that all purchases must be kept segregated from the regular stock for a week, and that the books of the businesses be open to inspection of city police at all times.

The ordinance was the result of considerable investigation following a complaint by Eugene merchants. They charged that second hand dealers were knowingly purchasing stolen goods and when the rightful owners of the stolen goods attempted to recover their property it was impossible to do so except by buying it back.

It was charged that some second hand dealers were fostering youth delinquency.

MYRTLE CREEK

MYRTLE CREEK, May 16.—(H) Brewer, who for several years has officiated as grass-cutter for this city's annual clean-up, is finding rather short snipping in most of the streets. The drought conditions are showing in every phase of agriculture in this part of the county. The strawberries crop which has just begun to set in good swing, is not feasible for much smaller berries than usual. The hay and grain crops are fair where the sowing was done last fall and in a very few places where the ground was in good condition, spring sown grain will be high enough to cut and will probably yield a full crop. Vegetable gardens look bad and in many places a lot of the seeds are not even up.

Not long ago Sam Thackeray shut the car door on his right thumb, mashing and lacerating it badly. It is slightly infected at present and is giving him a lot of pain and trouble.

The young people live in Eugene. They were not successful in finding a house which exactly suited them but may be able to do so when school is out.

1939 Motor Cruise: To Fort Rock

Two of the motorloggers examine rubble in the Indian cave.

This newspaper is co-operating with the Oregon State Motor association, and The Oregonian in presenting a series of motorlogs designed to stimulate travel in the Pacific northwest and enjoyment of Oregon's recreational areas. The following article is condensed from a full-page article appearing in The Oregonian May 25.

A half-day cruise by automobile from Bend and return took an Oregonian-Oregon Motor association motorlog party to the interesting Fort Rock country, 70 miles south of Bend, over good highways and far-from-bad country roads.

Highlights of the trip were Fort Rock, which stands alone and forlorn on the flat valley floor, once the bed of a huge lake, and an ancient Indian cave in another cinder cone a short distance from Fort Rock. Charred sandals, made from shredded sagebrush bark, found in the cave last year indicate that Indians lived there from 1600 to 2000 years before hot pumice was deposited over the area by volcanic action.

Finds in this cave and two others in southeastern Oregon have given scientists important evidence in their attempts to fix the date when man first appeared on the American continent.

The party, escorted by Phil F. Brogan, Bend newspaperman and amateur geologist, also visited Lava Butte, a few miles south of Bend, and Hole-in-the-Ground, a huge depression near Fort Rock which may have been made by a meteor striking the earth or by volcanic action.

Human interest was added to the motorlog by Miss Beatrice Menkenmaier, 20, who runs an 180-acre ranch all alone at Fort Rock. Her parents are both dead and Miss Menkenmaier keeps the ranch going and at the same time takes care of a 12-year-old brother. She favors shorts, rather than chaps, as apparel for the modern ranchette, and she was wearing them when the motorlog party arrived at her home.

From Portland the drive to Fort Rock is about 270 miles. The motorlog group made the trip to Bend from Portland, 200 miles, by moonlight the night before the Bend-Fort Rock cruise. Many snow-capped peaks were visible in the moonlight.
